MEMORIES RECALLED.

Lines written upon reading a poem by Mr. S. McCamus of Sherbrook, County Cavan, Ireland, and recently published in the Peterborough Review;

A. McCamus a poet?
And we didn't know it!
Ard of the old sod
Where our fathers have trod!
Yes, a poet for sure
With a diction so pure,
Fine literary taste,
And a style most chaste.
O now, I am glad;
Though it does make me sad;
For the days of yore
And the old folk-lore
Come back to me.

Now again I see
The circle, the hearth
In the home of my birth
Where oft'n we did listen
While our young eyes would glisten.
To tales hum'rous and scary
Of the ghost and the fairy.
And the fate that befell,
(So our fathers could tell)
The poor Paddy belated
On the journey ill-fated,
When the light in the bog
He followed agog
'Til bedraggled and torn Most sad and forlorn,
He was found by day-light
In a terrible plight,
In spite of the coat
He had turned inside out.

Then there's the lakes of Killarney
And the stone they call Blarney
That made the tongue slick
When you gave it a lick;
And the hedg-es and brooks
And the four-leaf shamrocks.
O yes, and we've heard
Of the song of the bird
And the flowers that bloom
In the land they called "home".
Exited for a while
From the Emerald Isle

They were sojourners here
Where with hope and good cheer,
In this newer land,
With stout heart and strong hand,
Life's burdens they bore
'Til life's journey was o'er.

Dead! Yes, and gone home,
Ne'er again shall they roam;
No more burdens they bear,
Nor sorrow they share,
For they've reached the bright shore,
Where sorrow's no more.

So wherever we stray
For this may we pray
That our hearts may be pure,
So that we may secure
A home with the blest
In the land of sweet rest.

So we tender our friendship
And acknowledge our kinship
To our friend o'er the ocean
Whose poetic effusion
We have read and admired

REV. J. A. McCAMUS.

DORLAND.

The King Edward Dinner, which took place in the U. E. L. Church, on 23th, was a grand success. There was a great abundance of good things spread on the long table, set in the S. S. rooms, which looked very pretty with snowy curtains and Japanese lanterns. The programme was of an unusually excellent and high-class character. Mr. Madole ably occupied the chair, and gave a splendid speech.
Rev. Meers' address was well received, Miss Perry and Mr. Schell sang two duets ac-ceptably, Miss Iva Mae Horton, M. L. A., daughter of Rev. G. Horton, one of our former esteemed pastors, was enthusiastically welcomed back after her splendid singing here last year, and we knew her name on the programme would guarantee its success. She received loud applause after each selection, and especially took the audience by storm with her "Fan Song", which was beautifully rendered with fine expression and clear distinct pronunciation, which showed to advantage her high, clear-cut tones, and attractive, pleasing manner on the platform, after which she was compelled to respond with an encore, "Don't Be Cross", which she sang daintily, and with feeling. She will always receive a hearty welcome here. Several of the Elocutionary Contestants for the Gold Medal, Misses A. Paul, J. Phippen, F.
Stephens, M. Bell, gave splendid selections.
Proceeds amounted to over $80.00.

On Monday evening last an entertainment took place at the Lutheran Church, Morven circuit, under the auspices of the Sabbath School. It was a splendid success in spite of the very bad condition of the roads.
The S. S. children had been well trained, and gave some splendid choruses. Miss Asselsie recited, and Miss Nathella Smith sang a pretty song. Miss Horton, in her well-known, pleasing style, favored us with some beautiful solos, one being a

Peter Windover, who resides here and is employed as belt repairer in the cement works, had his left arm taken off just below the elbow, on Monday, while taking a piece of coal from the brush on the big coal belt. With his arm ground to pieces and pinned fast he had to wait until some of the mill hands came to his rescue. He was at once hurried to Marlbank on the motor, where Dr. Burrows of Marlbank, and Dr. Hewston of Tamworth, performed the operation, amputating the arm above the elbow.

MOSCOW.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lampkin have returned after spending a couple of weeks with friends at Morven and Cataract.

A valuable horse belonging to Neil Milsap was kicked a few days ago and it is thought the animal will not live.

Mrs. Amos Huffman entertained a few friends on Thursday evening in honor of her sister, Miss Montgomery, of Kingston, who was visiting her.

The shock of this recent explosion at Tweed was distinctly felt here.

News reached here yesterday of the death of Mary Craig, a young girl, who left here not long ago.

Henry Huffman lost a good horse last week.

DESERONTO ROAD.

The recent snow storm, which passed over this locality has been the worst seen in years, many old settlers affirming that the storm coupled with the severity of the weather eclipses anything seen in recent years. The roads between Deseronto and Napanee in some places are tunneled through while on the level the snow has an average of three feet.

Mr. and Mrs. Manly Flake, of Point Peter, Prince Edward County, have been visiting friends on this road for the past week returned home on Wednesday.

Mr. George Holland, formerly in the employ of Sam Allan, Deseronto, is now working for John Wood Thompson.

Building operations will likely open quite lively in the spring as several on this road are intending to build new barns.

Mr. Robert Bowen is on the sick list with La Grippe.

NINETY DEATHS

Bear Silent Witness to the Ravages of Kidney Disease.

An alarming fact—but statistics show that in post mortem examinations as to death from all cases, that in over 90 per cent. of such cases kidney disease is present. This almost incredible statement is borne out by years of comparison by some eminent medical men. A warning to those not cursed that the percentage of those not cursed with kidney taint is very small.
South American Kidney Cure relieves in six hours—is nature's preventive—clears the clogged parts—heals and permanently cures. (8)

They worked far into the night to acwhat was the trouble.

high and difficult Spring Song, and had to give an encore after each selection. The pupils in the S. S. class, which Mrs. Schell, who is about to leave here to reside in Syracuse, has taught for years, took advantage of the occasion to present her with a lovely china biscuit jar, with silver top and handle. She was also presented, by the S. S., with two beautiful pieces of hand painted china. She will be greatly missed, and all good wishes go with her.

I wish that I might talk with all sick ones about the actual cause of Stomach, Heart, and Kidney ailments. To explain in person how weak Stomach nerves leads to Stomach weakness, I am sure would interest all. And it is the same with weak Hearts or weak Kidneys. This is why my prescription —Dr. Shoop's Restorative—so promptly reaches ailments of the Stomach, Heart, and Kidneys. It is wrong to drug the Stomach or stimulate the Heart or Kidneys. These weak inside nerves simply need more strength.
My Restorative is the only prescription made expressly for these nerves.
Next to seeing you personally, will be to mail you free, my new booklet entitled, "What to Do." I will also send samples of my Restorative as well. Write for the book to-day. It will surely interest you. Address Dr.

One Seam For Fifteen Years.

It has been said that the most monotonous form of labor is gumming labels. But there are many others which come very near it. In the boot and shoe trade, for instance, the work is divided among as many workers as possible. One will thus make a single cut in the leather and another give one turn of the machine handle. In some cases a pair of shoes have passed through fifteen pairs of hands before reaching completion. As a natural result, there are workers who week after week go on performing the same work hundreds of times a day. Indeed in one factory there is a woman who for fifteen years has sewed only one seam.
Her machine works so rapidly that she spends as much time inserting and withdrawing her work as in the actual sewing.—Westminster Gazette.

BEAU FIELDING.

He Was the Enigma of English Social Life in His Day.

Beau Fielding was a young man of fashion in the reign of William III. His house was sumptuously furnished, his hunters, hacks and racers were of great value, and "he kept a table of princely hospitality." He had no ostensible source of income. All that was known of him was that he was the fifth son of Thomas Wilson, an impoverished gentleman of Leicestershire. Evelyn describes him as a very young man, "civil and good natured, but of no great force of character," and "very sober and of good fame." All attempts to discover his secret were vain. "In his most careless hours of amusement he kept a strict guard over his tongue and left scandal to conjecture what it pleased."

He redeemed his father's estate and portioned off his sisters and when remonstrated with on his extravagance replied that, however long his life should last, he would always have enough to live in the same way. Some said it was he who had robbed the Holland mail, for which another man had suffered; others that he depended upon the gambling table, though he never played for large sums. He was the enigma of social life till his career was cut short by a duel. His adversary was at that time a young man about town like himself, John Law, who afterward became the founder of the famous Mississippi scheme by which half of France was ruined. When the mysterious Beau died he left only a few pounds behind him and not a scrap of evidence to enlighten public curiosity.

Just Out.

Elder Brother—Didn't you stop at the news agent's and get that magazine for me?

Jimmie—He didn't have none; jest sold out.

"Did he say so?"

"I didn't have to ask him. There he had it all printed on a big sign, 'Magazine Jest Out.'"—Chums.

The Missing Factors.

"Now, then, children," said the teacher, "what is it we want most in this world to make us perfectly happy?"

"De things we ain't got!" shouted the bright boy in the back seat.—Philadelphia Press.

The less religion a man has the more he thinks his wife ought to have.—Chicago News.

Corby, ex-P.M. and Fred R. Timgan, with others, have purchased vast rock and clay properties along the Bay of Quinte shore, and the big cement works and linehills will be started at an estimated cost of nearly $7,000,000.

Hugh Turner was killed without a moment's warning while at work in Martin & Sayer's flour mill at Glenora Tuesday afternoon. No one was a witness of the sad fatality, but it is supposed he was readjusting a belt while the machinery was in motion and was caught. He called for help, but when Mr. Martin came in he was lying dead. The unfortunate man was married only a few weeks ago.

Clarence W. Mattie, Woodstock, an 18-year-old lad, was saved from freezing to death Saturday night by a farmer's collie dog. Young Mattie is employed in a lively stable and undertook to drive into the country. On the return his hands became so numb he lost control of the horse and fell out of the cutter. The barking of the farmer's dog attracted attention. The animal led the farmer right to the spot. The boy may lose his hands and feet.

At New Liskeard, on Sunday morning six children and their mother were burned to death when the house they were living in burned down. The victims are Mrs. Lawrence Haacke and her children, Vera Margaret, aged 11; Mabel Irene, aged 9; George Frederick, aged 6; Clarence Henry, aged 4; Annie Evelyn, aged 2, and a new born infant. The father had lit a fire in the front room and went out to get wood to light the kitchen fire. When he returned to the kitchen he heard his wife screaming, and rushing in discovered the front part of the house and the stairway on fire. He ran for his son-in-law and together tried to rescue the family from the only window upstairs by a ladder, but were unable to do so, and both men were badly burned.

Beacon Fires in China.

In China such beacon fires as spread the alarm of the Spanish armada through England used to be the call to war. Many years ago, the story goes, the emperor sat with a beautiful woman looking toward the beacon hills. She would like to see those waiting piles lighted, and upon her insistence the thing was done. The greatest excitement prevailed throughout the provinces, and troops came hurrying in from all sides. When the leaders learned that no danger menaced, that the fires were lighted to satisfy the whim of a woman, their wrath fed on their lost confidence, and with the actual call to arms the response was slow and unenthusiastic. It was a repetition of the old story in Webster's spelling book. "Wolf" had been cried too often.

Antiquity of the Mortgage.

The legal document known as a mortgage can be traced as far back as the dawn of authentic history. The mortgage comes directly down to us from the Romans, but its antiquity is much more remote than the Roman nation. The Greeks, Carthaginians, Persians, Egyptians, Babylonians, all knew of the mortgage and daily used it in their business transactions. It is safe to say that the custom of giving mortgages is practically as old as settled human society.—New York American.

More Than Luck.

"Do you believe in special providence?"

"Sure! When I was a boy the school I attended was struck by lightning one night and burned."

"Nothing special about that."

"Oh, but it was just the night before the circus came to town!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

A MAN'S REVENGE;

OR, THE CONVICT'S DAUGHTER.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Meanwhile Bill Green had reached the road and was hurrying along it as quickly as he could go towards the nearest station. For although he had seen no one in the wilderness he had heard voices as he crept along, and more than once paused to glance behind him, with eyes full of fearful caution.

And it was only by chance that he escaped so easily, for a few seconds after he left the house one of the men-servants, who had crept around the corner to peep into the windows of the servants' hall, came back to his post at the foot of the balcony steps.

"Ridiculous nonsense!" he ejaculated with a yawn, "as though anyone would break in in broad daylight."

He glanced up at the closed door and smiled contemptuously. Little he knew that someone had broken in and escaped, thanks to his slipshod fashion of executing his duties. And, in like manner, the men in the wilderness, sharing the same views, had foregathered at a space opening into the stable yard, thus leaving the way clear for Bill.

"We can see any one creep along, I bet," said one. "Not that I think any man fool enough to try it on. But I ain't going to kick my heels up in this here wood for nothing. It eases her nerves for her to think we're on the watch; but as it ain't necessary we needn't do it."

"Right y'are, George. We'll have our smoke here, and then we'll stroll along, promiscuous like. Females are nervous by fits and starts. But there's two ways of pampering such feelings."

For Eileen had not said enough to rouse their fears, and, through her reticence on the subject succeeded only in making them shrug their shoulders mentally and put her orders down to nervousness.

Therefore, Bill, who had made all his plans with the skill of an experienced burglar, caught the mail-train and reached his quarters in London at night-fall.

Hetty, who sat sewing by the table, looked up as he entered the room.

"Well," she asked, "have you been lucky?"

He grunted inaudibly, and, sitting down, began to attack the ready meal she had spread at the other end of the table.

"It depends what you call luck," he muttered at last, his eyes on hers.

"Oh, Bill," she exclaimed reproachfully, "you know what I mean. The question that's never out of my mind is—Where is Sunbeam? Is she living or dead?"

His eyes dropped to his plate, and he munched on in silence. She sighed and turned to her work. It was evident that he knew nothing more, that the longing to find her darling would not yet be appeased.

Her tears dropped silently on to her work. Bill, glancing at her furtively, shrugged his shoulders and laughed.

"You're a fool, Het, to worry like that. The girl don't care for you enough to put you at ease about her. We've warned a serpent in our breasts, it's a turpin' round to sting us now."

She started and raised her head. Though her face still retained its comeliness, all the laughter had died out of it, and there was a look of intense misery upon it.

"What do you mean, Bill? Have you heard something?" she faltered eagerly.

"Yes, I have. What's more, I've seen Sunbeam. She's all right, so don't snivel."

nothing. Besides I was too busy—"

"Oh, why did you go in after all?" she moaned. "For perhaps she may be blamed. She won't betray you, Bill; of that I'm sure. But when you heard someone coming, and left her there with those things, what do you suppose she did?"

"Told the truth, no doubt," he retorted with a sneer.

She shook her head.

"No—not she. If she said anything it was nothing about you. Sunbeam ain't a sneak. But depend upon it, they'll blame her. Finding her with all those things and unable to say anything, what must they think? If they just know she's your child and no other's, what must they believe? Oh, Bill, you've drawn more trouble upon her. What can we do?"

"Do!" he exclaimed roughly, "save our own skin of course. If they know all, things won't be easy for you'n me. It stands to reason that they know who she is, too. Else how come she there? The world ain't full of miracles now if it ever was, out of womens' silly heads. You bet Sir Ralph warn't as simple as he made out. He sent her to Lady Cruise, though how I managed to miss her I dunno, for I watched enough when first I came up. However, I ain't a-goin' to worry about that. We'll lay low, that's all, for a time. Depend upon it she will make them treat us right if what you say about her lovin' us is true. But that'll take time, in course."

"But they'll still accuse her, Bill," she exclaimed, her lips a-quiver. "They'll think she has learnt to be dishonest all these years, they won't believe she's as innocent as the lamb unborn. They'll blame her sure as sure. Only they'll hush it up as the only missing things belong to Lady Cruise. She'll do that. Put for all that, Sunbeam will have a bad time—and it's you, what loved her so, who's brought her to such sorrow. Bill, Bill, I didn't think you'd have so hard a heart towards the little lass you loved."

He flung her aside angrily and made for the door.

"Course you with your croakin'," he growled.

"But, Bill," she pleaded, "we can yet save her from that. Tell me where it was and where I shall find her."

But the door banging noisily was her sole reply. With a sob she buried her face in her hands and gave herself up to her grief.

For her darling was, perhaps, in greater trouble than she had imagined possible, and she could not save her, since the salvation of one of the two she loved, meant the certain destruction of the other. What could she do if Sunbeam were really in the plight she pictured?

If only she could see Mr. Sinclair, he might help her, and yet how would that be possible, unless she betrayed Bill? No. She was a wretched woman, for her hands were tied, and for Bill's sake she must leave Sunbeam to bear her troubles alone.

But, to do him justice, until she suggested it, that same thought had not entered Bill's mind, and despite his anger and seeming indifference his heart filled with forebodings. Though Sunbeam had treated him badly, he did not want her to suffer to that extent. And yet, what could he do? Even if he returned the pearls, which would be folly, that would not clear her of the suspicion of dishonesty if it had fallen upon her. He might, of course, confess Lady Larkin looked serious.

"Hardly," she replied; "and yet Eileen's tale is so strange! What was Sunbeam doing with all our jewellery? Also we know that the child's history is peculiar, that her idea of right and wrong may not tally with our own. It is hard to believe that she had anything to do with the theft, and yet we have the proof—from what Eileen says."

The others, who already in that short time since their return had heard the entire narrative and a great deal about Sunbeam's past, nodded at one another, murmuring—

"It seems inconceivable! And yet with her antecedents what could one expect?"

Lady Cruise, hearing, turned away with a gleam of anger in her usually gentle face. Was she the only one who would believe in the child and uphold her? The sorrow at her great loss—for the pearls were indeed valuable—was forgotten in her sorrow for Sunbeam. She knew that, beneath suspicion, even with her belief in her, the girl would droop like a dying flower.

At that moment her gaze fell on Duncan, who had just entered the room and stood silently contemplating the faces before him. Her heart bounded with relief. Duncan was Sunbeam's friend. He would help to clear her name. But as she opened her lips to call him to her side he moved closer to Eileen, saying—

"I cannot believe this ridiculous story, either, Eileen. Will you have Sunbeam in, and allow her to tell us her version?"

Eileen colored vividly and dropped her eyes from his.

"I am afraid I cannot," she murmured.

"Why not?" he demanded in a tone of surprise. "Surely you do not think the ordeal would be too great for her—or you would not refuse to allow her to clear herself of a vile suspicion? For I, although I know everything about her parents, would as soon believe myself guilty as Sunbeam."

She flinched, raising flaming eyes to his.

"Nevertheless you will find that you are wrong. Others have evidently thought so, since—"

"No one will who knows her," he interrupted warmly. "We are all ready to help her tell her story. Eileen, I will ring, and—"

"It is no good you ringing, for Sunbeam is not in the house," she exclaimed, as he stepped towards the bell.

"Not in the house!" he exclaimed, his hand dropping heavily to his side.

"Not in the house!" ejaculated Lady Cruise.

"What do you mean, Eileen?"

"I told you she was under suspicion. She has been arrested—the constable took her away!"

A low wailing crept around the room. Duncan swallowed an angry exclamation. Lady Cruise seized Eileen's arm and forced her to meet her eyes.

"You mean she has gone to prison—you sent her there—for stealing my pearls," she murmured.

Eileen bowed her head. Her stiff lips refused to move, the scorn in her friend's face shrivelled her soul.

"Has she gone to prison?" continued Lady Cruise.

"Yes," faltered Eileen, gaining courage as she saw sympathy in one or two of the others' faces. "I had to let her go. I had to send for the police, and, of course, they insisted on taking her away."

"I should not have believed you could be so cruel, Eileen," sighed Lady Cruise, drawing her hand away, and turning to Duncan.

SLEEPLESS BABIES ARE SICKLY BABIES.

Well babies sleep soundly and wake up brightly. When little ones are restless, sleepless and cross it is the surest sign that they are not well. Probably the stomach or bowels is out of order, or it may be teething troubles. Give Baby's Own Tablets and see how quickly the child grows well and happy and sleeps soundly and naturally. Not the drugged sleep of "soothing" medicines, but the natural sleep of health. "He seems to take life seriously for so young a man." "Yes; you see, he's in love, and he has to run the gauntlet of her little brother, her father and the bulldog every time he calls!"

At once looked through a telescope. I don't know as it was the largest in the world. I hope it wasn't. But it brought the moon so near that we could see a man in it gesticulating wildly, and crying out, 'Don't shoot! don't shoot!' The old fool thought it was a big cannon that we were pointing at him." The quiet man subsided, and so did all the rest of them.

A Cure for Fever and Ague.—Palmolee's Vegetable Pills are compounded for use in any climate, and they will be found to preserve their powers in any latitude. In fever and ague they act upon the secretions and neutralize the poison which has found its way into the blood. They correct the impurities which find entrance into the system through drinking water or food and if used as a preventive fevers are avoided.

Life Insurance Doctor: "Do you contemplate any enterprise involving great personal risk or danger?" Applicant: "Yes; I am going to discharge our cook to-night."

Recently in England the mind of the public has been much exercised as to the correct pronunciation of the word "BOVRIL," the name of the well-known preparation of beef. A consensus of opinion has been obtained by the proprietors of the preparation. As many as 90,640 voted for "BOV-RIL" and that seems to have been the favorite pronunciation. A Mrs. Brain of Southampton, near Bristol, secured a prize of £100 by giving the exact number of the majority of persons voting for "BOV-RIL." Whether pronounced "BOV-RIL" or "BOV-RIL," the preparation is very acceptable at this time of year.

A witty as well as a soft answer will sometimes turn away wrath. A candidate, in the midst of a stirring address, was struck by a rotten egg full in the face. Pausing to wipe away the contents of the missile, he calmly continued: "I have always contended that my opponent's arguments were a very unsound!" The crowd roared, and he was no longer molested.

"Bill! Bill!" she cried, half rising from her chair. "So you know where she is? And you—oh, tell me now, at once. Don't torture me!" "She's in clover—and she's so mighty good that, as I say, she's betrayed me by now. Likely as not the perlice will be here soon, an'—"

"I don't believe it, Sunbeam is true. Though you've driven her out into the world by your conduct to her, she'll die before she injures you. But tell me where she is that I may fetch her—my poor lonely lamb."

Bill sneered, and throwing back his head, laughed gruffly.

"She's in a terrible way—poor lamb, alone in a wicked world, wallowing in the luxuries of the rich, under the motherly wing of Lady Cruise."

Hetty fell back in her chair, gasping. "Bill—is it true? You're not joking. Bill?" she stammered.

"Why should I lie? It's true enough. An' so is this."

He laid a leather case upon her knees. Stooping over it she carefully opened it with trembling fingers, then checked a cry and glanced up at him with inquiring, frightened eyes.

"Are those the pearls—that belong to—these you meant?" she whispered in awestruck tones.

"Yes, Lady Cruise's. But for Sunbeam I should have had more'n that—other things as good, diamonds and such like. But for Sunbeam we might have left England for good an' all—though these will be of some—"

She had risen to her feet and leaned towards him imploringly, exclaiming: "Oh, Bill, you'll be caught, as sure as you stand here. Hide them, take them away—and take me to Sunbeam, or tell me where she is. She won't—"

He scowled and interrupted her impatiently.

"I've told you. She's with Lady Cruise. Surely you won't go there? Listen, I'll tell you all, only jolly quick, for I've work to do to-night."

And he plunged into his tale, she listening, open-mouthed, wiping away a silent tear from time to time.

"Do you think they know all we know?" she fearfully asked as he finished, and pushing back his chair, rose with the pearls in his hand.

"She don't, at all events. So I bet they only suspects. But, there, I can't say

But, to do him justice, until she suggested it, that same thought had not entered Bill's mind, and despite his anger and seeming indifference his heart filled with forebodings. Though Sunbeam had treated him badly, he did not want her to suffer to that extent. And yet, what could he do? Even if he returned the pearls, which would be folly, that would not clear her of the suspicion of dishonesty if it had fallen upon her. He might, of course, confess all, and thus put himself straight into the lion's mouth. He might—but then Sunbeam was not worth that now. Years ago, when her baby hands tugged at his heart he might have acted the soft idiot, but now it would be ridiculous to endanger himself to that extent. He remembered how pleased he had felt to see her suddenly before him in the wilderness; with what joy his heart had bounded as his eyes fell upon her startled face; joy that he had crushed with cupidity and deception.

He felt her soft lips upon his cheek, her arms around his neck. Yes, she loved him, perhaps loved him enough to bear the punishment for his sins, unflinchingly—could they have blamed her for the theft?

He paused; a scowl upon his face, and looked up the narrow courtyard he had entered. Then turned into a darkened house, sloughing guiltily around the door.

After all why should he do anything? Sunbeam was nothing to him now. She had taken herself out of his life. But, for all that, he must get her face out of his mind, the sound of her voice from his ears, or he might, in a weak moment, injure himself irreparably for her sake.

Gentleman Dan met him at a room door and led him in silently. Then faced him with burning eyes.

"Well?" he asked, his voice thickly caged.

"Bad luck," replied Bill, showing the pearls, his tongue stuck in his cheek.

"You call that bad luck?" ejaculated the other. "Why, they're worth a fortune! Show the others."

"None! That's the bad luck. I was interrupted. But it ain't worth while trying there again. Besides, I know a better job."

"Ah! And Sunbeam? Have you found her yet?" demanded Dan, weighing the heavy pearl rope in his hand as he put the question.

"No. Curse her. And don't want to," muttered Bill. "I'll not trouble about her any more. Let her go, I say."

"Then you're sure to find her if you give up looking, and then I'll have my say, Bill Green, remember that. Neither you nor Sunbeam will fool me, so there," replied Dan quietly, his eyes on Bill's sullen face.

CHAPTER XXIV.

"Sunbeam a thief! I cannot believe it. Surely you do not mean it, Eileen!" exclaimed Lady Cruise, glancing appealingly at her young hostess and the group of serious faces around her. "Surely there is some terrible mistake!" Eileen shrugged her shoulders.

"I wish I could think so!" she replied. "I assure you nothing would give me greater pleasure. But there, I have told you all, also how your maid told me that your pearls were missing. I myself found Sunbeam in your room with these other things you all have recovered. That you should be the chief victim seems strange, but easily explained nevertheless."

"I cannot believe it," reiterated Lady Cruise, her face full of despair. "Surely Sunbeam can explain her presence in my room. Perhaps—"

"She told some senseless story about finding the things, then, contradicting herself, said a man had dropped them. Indeed, I am most sorry about the whole affair. But such things have been known to happen—where pretty girls have entered houses in like fashion with the same result. I feel wretched about your pearls, Lady Cruise, but, nevertheless, hopeful that they will be found."

"Their fate does not trouble me so much as Sunbeam's. Poor child! I must see her now, at once, to reassure her, and hear her tale. Surely you none of you believe she is guilty? Eileen is ever zealous in the matter. Knowing the girl as you do, can you, for instance, believe it, Adele?"

Drawnwork Popular

For household use the main idea in the selection is that it should be of a kind and quality to give satisfactory wear.

It is for this reason that drawnwork has proved such a great favorite for so many seasons.

For there is no form of decoration for this purpose which looks better after it is laundered than does drawnwork, whether it be of Japanese or Mexican origin. There are no other forms of ornamentation which launder so well.

The fact is that drawnwork of Japanese origin can be obtained at such moderate cost that any one who desires can become the possessor of specimens of table or bed linen ornamented with it.

Irish hand-embroidered bed sets, consisting of sheets and pillow cases, are shown in great variety in all of the leading retail departments which cater to the fine trade.

Some of the designs are quite simple and of moderate cost. The work is of the solid variety of the more expensive examples have a portion of the design executed in openwork effect.

The vogue of the hand towel with scallop embroidered edges is on the increase. This was brought about by the introduction of the stamped towel ready for embroidery, and now most household linen departments carry the ready-made article in both damask and duck.

There continues to be a demand for the stamped article, though by some authorities it is thought that many women prefer to select their own linens for this style of embroidery, as they have a greater variety of styles and qualities from which to make a selection.

Finishing Towels

The ends of the towels may be scalloped and worked with solid buttonhole stitch. There may be a design in eyelet and French embroidery above the scallop on one end and the scallop with the initials on the other end.

Letters from four to six inches high can be used on the towels. They should be padded.

First, take short running stitches, just inside the stamped outlines. Fill the space between the running stitches with a layer of outline stitches set close and even; into this layer of outline stitches work another layer, taking the stitches of the second layer into the stitches of the first layer and not into the material. Work a third layer into the stitches of the second layer in the same manner.

Work across this padding close satin stitch, setting the needle for the satin stitch on the stamped outlines of the letter; these outlines should never be covered with the padding stitches.

One way of learning a girl's faults is to praise her to her friends.

A Great Doctor Speaks of a Great Remedy

Greatest Doctors---Hope for the Sick,

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People is the only advertised medicine in the world that has had the public endorsement of a doctor of world-wide reputation. Such an endorsement stamps this medicine as being worthy of the confidence of every person who is sick or ailing. A great doctor would not risk his reputation unless he was absolutely confident, through a personal knowledge, that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do what is claimed for them. Dr. Giuseppe Lapponi, one of the greatest physicians of modern times, for years the trusted medical adviser of the Pope, writes the following strong letter in favor of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills:

"I certify that I have tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in four cases of the simple anaemia of development. After a few weeks of treatment, the result came fully up to my expectations. For that reason I shall not fail in the future to extend the use of this laudable preparation, not only in the treatment of other morbid forms of the category of anaemia or chlorosis, but also in cases of neurasthenia and the like." (Signed) DR. GIUSEPPE LAPPONI, Via dei Gracchi 332, Rome.

The "simple anaemia of development" referred to by Dr. Lapponi is, of course, that tired, languid condition of young girls whose development to womanhood is tardy, and whose health, at the period of that development, is so often imperilled. His opinion of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at that time is of the highest scientific authority, and it confirms the many published cases in which anaemia and other diseases of the blood, as well as nervous diseases, have been cured by these pills, which, it need hardly be mentioned, owe their efficacy to their power of making new blood, and thus acting directly upon the digestive and nervous system. In all cases of anaemia, decline, indigestion, and all troubles due to bad blood, and all affections of the nerves, as St. Vitus' dance, paralysis and locomotor ataxia, they are commended to the public with all the greater confidence because they have the strong endorsement of this great physician.

KIDNAPPED IN DAYLIGHT

WHEN WANDERERS HAVE MYSTERIOUSLY "VANISHED."

It Is Said There Is Nothing Easier Than to Kidnap a Person in the Heart of London.

Wild as the theory may seem, it is by no means improbable that individuals who have incurred the ban of foreign Governments or secret organizations who have sought shelter in the metropolis have been kidnapped practically in open daylight in London and "suitably dealt with," says London Answers.

Only a few years ago Dr. Sun-Yet-Sen, a prominent member of the now powerful "Young China" party, was seized in broad daylight in Portland Place by two of his compatriots and hustled into the Chinese Embassy. He had incurred the enmity of the Empress. He had been kidnapped according to her instructions and conveyed to the Embassy, with the ultimate intention of placing him on board a ship in the Thames and transporting him to China, where he would inevitably have been beheaded, had he not, after some days' incarceration, been successful in throwing a letter out of a window which caused the British authorities to ### DEMAND HIS RELEASE.

The numerous Russian refugees—many of whom are famous in science and literature—who have made London their home, live in constant dread of being dragged by emissaries of the Tsar and smuggled back to the solitudes of Siberia. To this day the compatriots of Sergius Stepanik, the Russian author, smile at the coroner's jury who returned a verdict of "Accidental death" when Stepanik's mangled body was found on a level crossing on the railway line. They argue that a Power like Russia can find emissaries who will do strange deeds for gold, even in the heart of London.

Take the case of the distinguished scientist Prince Peter Kropotkin, for instance. After his escape from the Russian fortress of St. Peter and Paul, he settled in England, but frequently had to visit the Continent, where he was employed as correspondent for The Times. While in Geneva, a highly-placed official Kropotkin's promptness saved his liberty. He published particulars of the plot in The Times, and returned to this country, where, however, the enmity of his persecutors did not cease.

Soon afterwards he published a book, titled "In French and Russian Prisons," but every copy of the first edition was bought up by agents of the Russian Government.

A second edition was at once ordered, but before it could be printed a mysterious burglary occurred at Messrs. Ward & Downey's, the publishers. Nothing was stolen but the stereo plates were destroyed, and the MS., which was kept in the office safe, was burnt. This book has since, however, been reprinted from an advance copy which had been sent to a library in Boston.

from the refreshment-room at Charing Cross Station, where he had entered to have a drink with a friend. From that day nothing has been heard of him, but both the police and the Custom House officials agree that, granted money, there is nothing easier than to kidnap a person in the heart of London.

All that is necessary to is to inveigle him to partake of a drink or a cup of coffee in the most crowded resort. The drink is dexterously drugged, and the waiter is coolly told to call a cab, as the gentleman is overcome with liquor, and his friends will see him home. He is driven to a house kept by some foreigner in the pay of the Government he has offended. His clothes are changed for those of a sailor, and another cab conveys him to the docks, whence he is smuggled out of the country.

WINDMILL SIGNALLING.

Valuable for Military Purposes, the Dutch Government Has Discovered.

To the casual observer viewing a Dutch landscape there is nothing to arrest the attention in the fact that possibly one or more out of a dozen windmills in sight are to all appearances simply standing idle while the others continue their never ending task.

If one watches the sails of the idle mills closely it may perhaps be noticed that they move slightly from time to time and then remain for a while at a different angle. If this is so the miller is in all probability engaged in holding a conversation with the proprietor of the mill, which may be miles away, in fact possibly barely visible on the horizon.

Quite recently the Dutch Government carried on a series of experiments in order to ascertain the value of windmill signalling for military purposes, and were surprised to find that communication could readily be established with far distant centres and that confidential messages could be sent on from one mill to another and so forwarded throughout the length and breadth of Holland in an incredibly short time by means of secret codes known only to the millers themselves.

These codes have been handed down from generation to generation and jealously guarded from outsiders with all the intense conservatism for which the provincial Dutch are proverbial. Apart, however, from these secret codes, understood only by the millers and local groups of mill owners, there exists a night caller. So the doctor slipped on the top step, but he did not lose any time, as he slipped on "The D & L" Menthol Plaster and all was right in a jiffy.

Guest: "Waiter, bring me some rice-pudding." Waiter: "Er—'fraid I can't jest recommend the rice-puddin' to-day, sir." Guest: "What's the matter with it?" Waiter: "Nothing, sir; 'cept there ain't none!"

There is no medicine on the market that can compare with Bickie's Anti-Consumptive Syrup in expelling from the system the irritating germs that colds engender in the air passages. It is suicide to neglect your cold. Try the cheap experiment of ridding yourself of it by using Bickie's Syrup, which is a simple remedy, easily taken, and once used it will always be prized as a sovereign medicine.

"You were always a fault-finder!" growled the wife. "Yes, dear," responded the husband, meekly; "I found you!"

If You are Nervous and Irritable, take "Perrovin," the great nerve and blood tonic; you will be a new person by the time you have used a bottle. $1.00 bottles. All dealers.

She: "Some people profit by the mistakes of others." He: "Yes, like the minister who got five dollars for marrying us."

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

"Why are they called pyramids, grandpa?" queried little Emerson, who was looking at a picture of those Egyptian wonders. "They are called pyramids, my boy," replied the old man, shamelessly, "because they appear amid the general desolation of the desert." Whereupon the hall clock tried to hide its face with its hands.

GIFTS NOT TO BE ACCEPTED.

Why Princes of India are Safe in Offering Jewels to British Officers.

There is a curious custom at the courts of the Indian princes. When a British officer or a physician calls upon a rajah he is shown into the reception or throne room, where sits the rajah surrounded by the great state officers. After the exchange of the usual salutations one of the officers brings in a tray on which are displayed jewels and golden ornaments studded with valuable stones, perhaps worth £50,000 or more, says London Tit-Bits.

The trayful of valuables is supposed to be a present from the rajah to his visitors, and it is offered first to the gentleman, who inclines his head, touches the edge of the tray with the tips of his fingers, and it is then passed over to the lady who invariably accompanies the British officer. If he is married, on such occasions. She follows the example of her husband, and the tray and its contents are then returned to the jewel room.

In lieu of the unaccepted jewels a long necklace of tinsel, of little value, is rajah, who being generous, wishes to give—exclusive of a money fee, varying from £200 to £1,000, according to the operation performed—a present of a shawl, golden cup or some similar valuable, the doctor must obtain special permission from the Viceroy before he dare accept the present.

If any officer accepts a gift of any value without such permission he may have to resign. This rule was made because in the old days, when the East India Company governed India, an officer's pickings and the presents, often extorted from the rajah, were worth much more to him than his salary.

Just the Thing That's Wanted.—A pill that acts upon the stomach and yet is so compounded that certain ingredients of it preserve their power to act upon the intestinal canals, so as to clear them of excreta the retention of which cannot but be hurtful, was long looked for by the medical profession. It was found in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are the result of much expert study, and are scientifically prepared as a laxative and an alternative in one.

NECESSITY FOR ACTION.

Nan: "I was astonished to learn that In Billwink had gone and married that Spriggins boy. Why, she's a good ten years older than he is."

Fan: "I know it, but it had narrowed down to a choice between him and his father, and she had to decide quick."

HIS CHANCES.

The man who owns enough of this world's goods to keep him from dirt, debt and hunger has a thousand chances of avoiding evil against the one of the man whom the demon of discouragement drags through depths from which it is almost impossible to escape without severe demoralization of body, mind and spirit.

HOME-MADE COUGH MIXTURE

Procure from your druggist the following ingredients and mix at home:—

One-half ounce fluid extract licorice, one-half ounce fluid extract cascar, one ounce elixir tolen, six ounces best rye whiskey. Dose: One dessertspoonful every two or three hours. Children in proportion. This mixture is said to be very effective in the treatment of coughs, whooping-cough, colds, and bronchitis.

Relief is certain after a few doses.

Eyelet Work

It is sometimes necessary to cut the material in the center of the circle thus: mark a small cross in the center of the stamped eyelet, cut through the four arms of this cross a straight slash with sharp-pointed scissors, turn one of the cut sections back and under with the point of the needle and work over and over stitches around the edge to the next section, which should also be turned back and under, in the same manner described for the first section. Repeat until the four sections have been turned back and the edge of the eyelet covered with the over and over stitches.

Remember, in making large or small eyelets, to take up on the needle, for each stitch, the least possible amount of material.

absolutely, that Lung-Germine, the German Treatment, has cured completely and permanently cases after case of advanced Consumption (Tuberculosis), Chronic Bronchitis, Catarrh of the Lungs, Catarrh of the Bronchial Tubes and other Lung Troubles. Many sufferers who have lost all hope and who had been given up by physicians have been permanently cured by Lung-Germine.

It is not only a cure for Consumption but a preventative. If your lungs are merely weak and the disease has not yet manifested itself, you can prevent its development, you can build up your lungs and system to their normal strength and capacity.

Under date of March 11, 1907, William Schmidt, 1904 Coleman street, St. Louis, Mo., writes:—"It is now nearly four years since my cure of Consumption was made complete by your Lung-Germine, and I am happy to say that I remain as well and strong to-day as the day I was cured. I am healthy and able to work every day."

Length of Stitches

THE length of the long and short stitches depends upon the size of the surface to be covered, as well as upon the number of shades to be blended into a given space.

Where several shades are to be worked into a small space the short stitches may not exceed one-thirty-second of an inch in length.

For large spaces the long stitch may be a little less than one-half inch long and the short stitch a little less than three-eighths of an inch long.

Needlework Notes.

For instance, a pincushion was noticed decorated with corner designs, including scattered blossoms and butterflies. The tiny blossoms were in different colored linen threads.

A mingling of applique work with fancy stitching is seen on the new fancy work which is to be used on useful articles for bedrooms and dining rooms.

The foliage, of course, was around the bottom edge of the bag, while the flowers came half way to the top.

MORAL END OF MONEY MAKING

Business Without Ideal Ends Aims to Grossness and Materialism.

business without ideal ends aims to grossness and materialism. "Whosoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. x., 31.

There are those who talk of money and business as though these were necessarily and intrinsically evil. It is often supposed that capacity for goodness is established by incapacity for business, while those to whom poverty seems inevitable find consolation in regarding it as evidence of piety.

Large numbers of otherwise sensible people feel that there is some unavoidable conflict between the ideal and the real, between what they call the sacred and the secular, between the things they would like to do and to be and the things they actually have to do as part of their daily affairs and duties.

Probably the greater number try to meet the difficulty by dividing their lives and interests into separate parts. They say, business is business; religion is another thing altogether; I will work hard and honestly at my business and look forward to the comforts and pleasures of religion and ideal things.

So it happens that there are those who feel that to speak of religion on a weekday reveals a lack of the sense of the fitness of things, while other good people are quite sure that it is a wholly irreverent thing to speak of business on a Sunday. We tend to dwell alternatively in two sets of apartments.

THE PRACTICAL AND THE PIOUS.

Even where there are no such sharp lines through the life we feel that manufacture and the market, money making, and trading tend to blunt the finer sensibilities and act as a hindrance to the realization of our ideals, while, on the other hand, we are sure that the life of ideals is unfitted for business.

The result of this separation and apparent antagonism is that we cannot develop our lives symmetrically; we are torn by conflicting purposes; we fail to see any ideal ends in business or to find any practical values in religion. Religion without business tends to dreamy, purposeless moral enervation.

We need to spiritualize all our acts, our whole lives, our business, our work, our pleasures by giving them moral intent and value, so as to unify the sacred and the secular, the utilitarian, and the ideal by making each serve the other.

It does not make so much difference whether a man is engaged in money making or in writing poems and picturing the fair dreams of better things; the question is this, is the money making for the sake of the money or for some high and worthy end? What is the motive that impels either the dealer in dollars or the dealer in dreams?

Our ideals, visions, aspirations, and our religion become most damaging if they fail to find expression in conduct and work; lacking the practical, they result in a character that is satisfied with contemplating the good.

INSTEAD OF REALIZING IT.

The man who sinks his soul in dollars may personally be no worse than he who allows it to atrophy while he dreams.

Here in religion is the dynamic, are the motives that bear men on and buoy them up to do the toil, bear the burdens, stand in the fight of daily living, here are the visions that lift our eyes from the desk and the machine, from profits and discounts, and help us to see the worthy prizes of life.

No man could become a saint by separating himself from this world's turmoil and reading his Bible alone; neither can any man find strength and stability for life's business and battle, find satisfaction in its service and rewards, unless he sees through its dollars and its dirt the moral ends of all this world's work.

This noisy mill of daily living may be the greatest blessing we know; it is the opportunity for the expression of our highest ideals, for the transmutation of religion into terms of daily living; it is the place where character is molded by its stress, its calls to the strong will, and its manifold opportunities for the service of all mankind by each man in his place.

THE LESSON WORD STUDIES.

The Final Testimony of the Baptist.—During the period that Jesus tarried with his disciples in Judea, immediately succeeding the events described in our last lesson, John was still baptizing and preaching along the Jordan and its tributaries. At Amon, near to Salim in a narrow valley, between Mount Ebal and the Jordan, word was brought to the Baptist that the preaching of Jesus was becoming more popular than his own, as witnessed by the number of those presenting themselves for baptism. Josephus emphasizes the importance which was attached to the question raised by the Samaritan woman's words to Jesus and cites an instance in which a deputation of Jews and Samaritans was appointed to argue the same question and in which the Samaritan speaker, because theirs was the losing side in the debate, were put to death in harmony with the terms of a previous agreement.

THERE ARE PLENTY OF THEM AND THEY SELDOM CRY.

At an Early Age Begin to Make Themselves Useful—Tend Flocks of Goats at Three Years.

There is no race suicide in Egypt. From Alexandria to Assuan the country is filled with babies, round faced, solemn little tykes, who look out upon the world with great eyes that are painted with kila.

As in all Oriental countries, children in Egypt are welcomed. The more the merrier, says Leslie's Weekly. The wife is not even considered a true wife until she becomes a mother.

BEAUTIFUL BUT DIRTY.

Three characteristics of Egyptian babies impress themselves upon the tourist. The first is their beauty; for, although many of them are blind or nearly so from uncleanness and ophthalmia, they are all round faced and exquisitely modelled, their features are classically beautiful and their color is exactly like bronze.

Self-control is the next most impressive feature about these little folk, for it is a most unusual thing to hear an Egyptian baby cry. Noticeable, also, is these little ones' usefulness. It would take a very indifferent person indeed to fail to notice the infant toilers in Egypt. Not so much in Cairo or in the other large settlements, but in the stretches of country between.

From the boat on the Nile or the railroad one will see babies of two and a half and three years tending flocks of goats, and tots that are too small to make known their wants in intelligible language seem to be putting about, assisting in their small way in whatever task their elder relatives are engaged.

In Cairo little boys of 10 and 12 years are seen in the weaving mills working the old-fashioned hand looms, which require considerable strength as well as skill. Also in the furniture or turners' shops are small boys, using, like fathers, both hands and feet in the clearing and turning of table and chair legs, all of which is done in the most primitive manner, although the articles look like the result of

SKILLED WORMSHIP.

With all their earnestness and solemnity the young toilers are happy to a degree, and they apparently enjoy themselves as much as do the children who do nothing but play. In Luxor children ranging in age from 7 to 12 years are employed in carrying baskets of rubbish from the temples "n Karnac, which are being cleared of the accumulation of sand and broken rock burying some of the pillars, and these children sing at the top of their voices as they trudge to and fro with their burdens tilted upon their heads.

One would be inclined to feel sorry for them were it not for the fact that the honor of being so employed is greatly coveted by the children. These children in Luxor earn from 2 to 3 pence (15 cents) a day, and out of this trifling amount some of them have saved up quite a sum, which they bury in sand where no one but themselves knows where to find it.

Another thing which attracts the eye of the stranger in Egypt is the manner in which Egyptian babies are toted, as a Southerner expressed it. They are not cradled in their mothers' arms as are the babies of this country, but they are hoisted upon the shoulders of those carrying them, where they sit astride.

Tiny youngsters, scarcely old enough to sit up straight, are carried about the streets in this novel manner, and they maintain their seemingly perilous position with absolute fearlessness and without a whimper. Like the children and preaching along the Jordan and its tributaries. At Amon, near to Salim in a narrow valley, between Mount Ebal and the Jordan, word was brought to the Baptist that the preaching of Jesus was becoming more popular than his own, as witnessed by the number of those presenting themselves for baptism. This information, or rather the facts to which it called attention, gave to the Baptist the opportunity for a last sublimely loyal testimony to the character and mission of Jesus. This testimony is recorded in verses 28-36 of the preceding chapter. Addressing those who had brought to him the message, "Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond the Jordan, to whom thou hast borne witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him." John utters these memorable words: "Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. . . . He must increase, but I must decrease. He that cometh from above is above all: . . . The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hands. He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; but he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life." Thus does the Baptist testify to the divinity of Jesus, and there is no uncertain sound in his testimony. To him Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and only Revealer of the Father. The popularity of Jesus implied in the message brought to the Baptist at Amon soon arraigned against him the Pharisees and others, and he therefore leaves Judea, the stronghold of the Pharisaic opposition, and returns to Galilee. The shortest route takes him through Samaria, past the village of Sychar, near which was Jacob's Well. It is this journey of Jesus northward through Samaria that gives occasion for the events with which our present lesson narrative deals.

Verse 4. Samaria—This name was originally applied to the city built by Omri, king of Israel, on the hill purchased by him of Shemer (1 Kings 16, 23.) and rebuilt by Herod. Later the surrounding province also received its name from the city. The province is here referred to. The inhabitants of Samaria were a mixed population, with a mixed religion (2 Kings 17, 24-41; Ezra 4; Neh. 6), who, however, claimed to be true Israelites and professed to keep the law of Moses. They seem to have cordially reciprocated the hatred with which the people of Judea regarded them.

5. Sychar—Identified with the modern Askar, not far from Nablus, the ancient Shechem. The supposed tomb of Joseph is still shown in this vicinity.

6. Jacob's Well—A little south of Askar and about a mile from Nablus. The ancient well, now partially filled with stones and rubbish, is still to be seen, forming, as it does, one of the few undisputed sacred sites of the Holy Land.

The sixth hour—Noon.

9. No dealings with Samaritans—The writer's explanation of the woman's surprise at the request of Jesus made to her. The antipathy between Jews and Samaritans caused both as far as possible to avoid intercourse with one another. A remnant of the ancient Samaritan race still lives in partial isolation from other inhabitants of Palestine in this same vicinity of Ebal and Gerizim.

10. Living water—Well water, as distinguished from that of shallow cisterns. It is from the latter that the inhabitants of southern Palestine have always found it necessary to procure their principal water supply.

12. Art thou greater—The emphasis is on the pronoun. The woman could not understand how this hungry wayfarer could possibly furnish better water than that which she and her people derived from this ancient and honored well.

13. Jesus replies by expanding rather than explaining the metaphor, as he did his conversation with Nicodemus, and claims for his gift the wonderful power to quench man's thirst not for a time only but forever.

was excited alike by the Jews and Samaritans.

He then called Christ—A parenthetical explanation of the evangelist, not part of what the woman said.

27. Marvelled—At the seeming impropriety of their Master's speaking with a woman who was not only a stranger, but a despised Samaritan as well, this being contrary to the permitted custom of the time.

29. Can this be the Christ?—That it should thus be her good fortune to meet Him for whose coming both Jews and Samaritans had waited so long, seemed at first too good to be true.

30. They went out of the city.—So effectually had the woman's story excited their curiosity and interest.

32. Meat to eat that ye know not—We have here one of those enigmatical sayings so often and so effectually used by Jesus for the purpose of stimulating the intelligence of his hearers. The words furnished food for reflection, but were not understood by the disciples.

35. Lift up your eyes—Apparently Jesus directs the attention of his disciples with these words to the approach of the people from Sychar. We may imagine the picturesque sight furnished by the slow advance of the people up the slope toward the well, their white turbans nodding in the sunlight as they approached. It may well have been this scene which suggested to the mind of Jesus the field of grain white unto harvest moved and swayed into steady undulations by the wind. This thought in turn calls to his mind the greater multitude of men everywhere ready to receive the message of the gospel.

39. Because of the word of the woman—Even before they had heard Jesus himself speak.

40. Alode there two days—This was also contrary to what might have been expected of an orthodox Jew.

41. Because of his word—John continually introduces the testimony of Jesus himself to his divinity, in connection with the testimonies of other persons which he records in succession in his narrative.

42. The Saviour of the world—The conception of these Samaritans of the scope of the redemptive work which the Messiah was to accomplish seems to have been broader and deeper than that of most of the Jews themselves.

FOX IN A KITCHEN.

Reynard Gave Hunters and Hounds a Lively Chase in an English Town.

Some exciting scenes were witnessed at Stow recently at the meet of the Heythorpe Hounds, says the London Globe.

A fox, on being discovered near Abbotswold, proceeded to the town, where it darted through the open door of a photographer's studio. Being driven out into the garden, the animal sprang upon the roof of some low buildings, thence climbed the roof of a house and, sliding down the opposite slope, leaped into Park Street.

The fugitive then entered a house at the front door, but meeting a little girl half way up the stairs turned tail and made his way to the kitchen, where culinary operations were in progress.

The fox mounted the table and scattered the crockery with which it was covered, many articles being smashed as they fell with a clatter on the floor. Then, espying an open door, the animal made quick exit into a garden. Hounds meanwhile had tracked the fox to the studio, and many went right through the house and picked up the trail that led them eventually to the garden in which the fugitive was hiding.

The animal did not give in without a brave struggle for existence, leading hounds a chase over successive garden walls before he gave up his brush.

A serious fire broke out in the premises of Stephen Binley, St. George Street, Cork, recently, spreading to the residential wing of the Queen's Castle before it was finally put out by the firemen, assisted by the troops.

Three sailors watched George Murphy of Derry drown in the harbor of that town one day last week. None of the three could swim, and though they did all in their power, Murphy sank before their eyes. He was 70 years old, and was employed in the local asylum.

PITCHING IT STRONG.

Neither of the partners had arrived, and the clerks that morning were indulging in their usual bout of gossip. "D-d I tell you chaps, that I was leaving," drawled the languid swell of the staff, whose incompetence was as palatable as the spondee of his attire.

"Heard you'd got the sack," replied the spectacled cashier, gruffly.

"I answered an advertisement yesterday for what looks like a first-class job," resumed the over-dressed one, ignoring the remark. "I've pitched rather a strong yarn, but you've got to do that if you want to keep up with the times."

Just then the senior partner entered, and all wrote intently.

Within five minutes the "old man," who had been opening letters, called the last speaker into his room, and the following dialogue became plainly audible to those outside:—

"Have you been in our service seven years?"

"No, sir; only fifteen months."

"And is your salary $32.50 a week?"

"Eh, no sir—$7.50."

"And are you in entire charge of the counting-house?"

No reply.

"And are you leaving us because of a difference with the firm regarding the management of our branches?"

Dead silence and a short pause.

Then the old man:—

"You should be more careful in your statements, sir. This is a small world. The advertisement you answered was for the situation you are leaving on Saturday. That will do."

IT DIDN'T WORK.

A man who had been out of work for a long time suddenly recollected reading a story of a clerk who applied for a situation. He was courteously told that there was not a vacancy, and, as he turned away, he stooped and picked up a pin from the floor. The employer, struck by the action, called him back, and said: "You seem a careful sort of man. Call back to-morrow and we will give you a job."

Our hero therefore determined to copy this man's example, and next day saw him standing before a large manufacturer, having previously dropped a pin on the floor.

Getting the usual reply that there was no vacancy, he turned away, and then, like the other man, stooped and picked up a pin. But the result was different.

"Here, Henry!" shouted the employer, to his servant, "see this fellow off the premises! A man who steals a pin would steal anything!"

A FLOATING WORKSHOP.

A unique and interesting vessel is H. M. S. Cyclops—general repair ship to the British fleet. Amongst her machinery she has a plant capable of turning out castings weighing two tons, and lathes which will deal with such castings up to a length of 15 feet. The Cyclops is equipped to repair anything from a broken bolt to a 60-ton gun, a special feature of her machinery being that it is all electrically driven.

not cradled in their mothers' arms as are the babies of this country, but they are hoisted upon the shoulders of those carrying them, where they sit astride.

Tiny youngsters, scarcely old enough to sit up straight, are carried about the streets in this novel manner, and they maintain their seemingly perilous position with absolute fearlessness and without a whimper. Like the children of Cuba, many of the little Egyptians are entirely naked, and only scantiest clothing is worn by any.

INDULGENT PARENTS.

Although Egyptian parents of the poorer and middle classes believe in their children being useful, they are still extravagantly indulgent to them in every way. But, however much children are caressed and fondled they feel and manifest the most profound respect for their parents.

Disobedience to parents is considered by the Moslem one of the greatest of sins and classed among the seven great sins.

While ignorance is more in evidence than learning, there are many schools in all the large cities and the majority of the small ones. The most important branch of education is that of religion.

The first lesson, that of the "wudoo," or how to perform the ablutions previous to prayer, and the prayers, or one of them, is generally taught by the father to his son. The girls are seldom taught anything unless they belong to a wealthy or an unusually enlightened family, when a prayer or two and a bit of needlework is considered enough education for them.

An Arab school is one of the most interesting places in Cairo to visit. The children, with the schoolmaster, sit upon the floor, or the ground, in a semicircle, and each has a tablet of wood, which is painted white and upon which the lessons are written. When the latter are learned, they are washed out and

REPLACED BY OTHER LESSONS.

During the study hours the Arab schools remind one of the Chinese, for the children all study aloud, and as they chant they rock back and forth like trees in a storm, and this movement is continued for an hour or more at a time. The schoolmaster rocks back and forth also, and altogether the school presents a most novel appearance as well as sound. Worshippers in the mosques always move about reciting the Koran, as this movement is believed to assist the memory.

The desks of the Arab schools are odd contrivances of palm sticks, upon which is placed the Koran or one of the thirty sections of it. After learning the alphabet, the boys take up the study of the Koran memorizing entire chapters of it, until the sacred book is entirely familiar.

A peculiar method is followed in learning the Koran. The study begins with the opening chapter, and from this it skips to the last. The last but two, and so on in inverted order, ending finally with the second chapter.

During the student's progress it is customary for the schoolmaster to send on the wooden tablet a lesson painted in black and red and green to the father, who returns it after inspection, with a couple of plasters upon it. The salaries of schoolmasters are very meagre indeed, and in some instances the only payment made is that of clothing and food and a yearly present of a turban and some cloth.

RECIPES FOR THE COOK.

Berry Dumplings.—The winter desert of apple dumplings may be replaced by some made with raspberries or other berries. Serve with hard sauce into which is beaten as much of the crushed fruit as it will take without separating.

Left Over Beans.—Take the beans left over from a meal, rub through the colander, add a beaten egg, and sufficient breadcrumbs (or rolled crackers) to thicken. Season with butter, salt, a pinch of sage, and a little onion, if desired. Bake in a buttered deep bread pan and serve in slices. Delicious either hot or cold.

Popcorn Soup.—One can of corn, one quart of milk. Let this boil in a double boiler, strain, add pepper, salt, and a tablespoon of butter, thickened with crack-crumbs, and a handful of popped corn. Put half a pint of whipped cream on top, with a few kernels of popcorn. This is delicious, and is easy to make.

Kensington Cream.—One-half box of gelatin, soaked an hour in one-half pint of milk. Put a pint of milk in a double boiler with four tablespoonfuls of sugar and beaten yolks of four eggs. When boiling add gelatin and milk. Take from stove, pour in a teaspoonful of vanilla and the beaten whites of the four eggs; turn into a mold. Serve with maraschino cherries and whipped cream. Preserved cherries and berries may be used instead.

Snippidoodle.—Cream two cups of sugar with half a cup of butter, add two well beaten eggs and a cup of sour milk with a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in it; stir this into two and a half cups of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar and one-half teaspoonful salt; beat the batter and bake in low pans, dusting the tops of cakes with cinnamon and sugar. This recipe can be made into rolls, rolling the dough one inch thick and cutting in strips one inch wide.

Potato Nest with Peas.—Pare and boil good, firm potatoes sufficient for the family. Drain and mash in the ordinary way or press through a potato colander and place on a platter, leaving a round hollow space in the centre into which pour hot creamed peas. Sprinkle lightly with cayenne pepper and spread over the potatoes two well beaten eggs. Over this sprinkle generously grated cheese. Bake in the oven until the top is slightly browned. Served hot this dish makes a dish fit for royalty.

New Potatoes in Winter.—Take small, round potatoes of even size and smooth; peel and put into a cheesecloth bag. Put in a pan containing milk and water in equal quantities to cover, add sufficient salt, and cook slowly until done. Drain until dry then place for five minutes in the oven while preparing a white sauce with butter, flour, and a little milk. Place thoroughly dried potatoes in a deep covered dish and pour over them the sauce, and serve immediately. Cannot be told from new potatoes.

Vegetable Stew.—Parboil two pared potatoes, one turnip, one onion, and one carrot. Drain and cut into half inch dice. Chop fine two square inches of fat salt pork, put into a kettle, and cook slowly until well tried out. Skim out the pork fragments, stir in one teaspoonful of flour and brown slightly, then gradually add one pint of good beef, or, failing that, good boiling water. Season well with salt and pepper and the diced vegetables and a cupful each of shelled peas, lima beans, and corn cut from the cob. Simmer together until all are tender, add some chopped parsley, and serve.

out and edges rounded to make it neat, making two nice waxboards for rubbing irons on. The cuffs may also be used in this way. Iron holders may be made out of the remaining front pieces quilted on the machine. Over-sleeves can be made out of the sleeves by cutting off at desired length, hemming the top, and then inserting elastic in the hem. These are useful to protect clean sleeves while working.

Stove Blacking.—The following is an excellent blacking for cook stove and much cheaper than the patent polishes so much used now: Cut up a bar of laundry soap and boil in two quarts of water till dissolved, then add a cake of the old-fashioned stove blacking; stir till dissolved; it should be the consistency of cream; use old iron or tin pot to boil in; this will stick on top of stove when no other blacking will. The most obstinate stains in porcelain bath tub or sink will yield to an application of baking soda on a wet rag.

New Use for Fly Paper.—It is found that if a mouse puts his one foot on the paper he would put his other foot on, too, and it will hold him fast.

THOUGHTS FOR EVERY DAY.

Monday.—The art of life is to know how to enjoy little and endure much.

Tuesday.—Half the ills we hoard in our hearts are ills because we hoard them.

Wednesday.—Fresh responsibilities mean fresh power for serving God and Man.

Thursday.—How seldom we weigh our neighbor in the same balance with ourselves.

Friday.—Through a thousand unnoticed openings our inner life is flashed upon the world.

Saturday.—Conscience is the name the orthodox give to their prejudices.

Sunday.—Perseverance accomplishes more than precipitation.

PAY HEALTH FOR HONOR

BRITISH PREMIERS SUFFER FROM STRAIN OF HARD WORK.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's Recent Breakdown—Solely Due to Overwork.

Broken health is the price almost invariably paid for the highest office under the crown in England—that of prime minister. Truly it may be described as a killing job. Attention has been called once again to the tremendous strain it places on the vitality of its incumbent by the recent breakdown of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, which was solely due to overwork.

There probably is no position, public or private, in the world which makes so many demands on the time and energy of its holder. Americans are accustomed to the statement that the president of the United States is the hardest worked man in the country, and it is doubtful he is, but the president of the United States leads a life of luxurious ease compared with that of the prime minister of the British empire.

The duty of the ever present necessity of watching the political temper of parliament, on which the premier's tenure of office depends, and the drudgery of addressing numberless great meetings and travelling from one end of the kingdom to another when parliament is not sitting, and you may have some idea of the burden of the British prime minister.

MUST ATTEND THE KING.

In addition to all this he may be summoned at any moment to attend the King, and that is a summons that must not be disobeyed. He has to attend the King's privy councils and he must be in evidence when the King entertains foreign royalties or other guests

OLD TIME MAIL CARRIERS

HOW LETTERS WERE DISTRIBUTED YEARS AGO.

They Were Carried by "Boys," Who Were Often Men of 50 or 60 Years of Age.

It seems strange to reflect, in these days of frequent collections and prompt deliveries, that it is very little more than a century since letters despatched from London on a Tuesday night were not in the hands of the addressees in Edinburgh until the following Sunday, says the London Daily News. In the early years of the nineteenth century delays were continual in the less frequented parts of the country. When we consider the kind of postmen we had, the wages paid to them and the work they had to do, this is not to be wondered at.

Before the introduction of the mail coach, of which use was first made in 1784, letters were carried by "boys," who were frequently men of 50 or 60 years of age. They were mounted on ponies almost as ancient and broken down as themselves. They were exposed to the bufftings of the weather and to the rigors of the winter, and they often found a good inn fire, with a glass or two of hot grog, too alluring.

Down to the period of the introduction of the coach the post office was generally a stable as well, and the term "postmaster" had then a double significance. He was the person entrusted with the receipt and despatch of letters and with the provision of horses to carry the mails. The first part of the duty was often left to the bar men and chambermaids, and was while the horses provided were, as has been indicated, the worst instead of the best obtainable. The postmaster at Aberdeen in 1783 received a salary of about £90 a year, and at Glasgow this official's salary was £140 and that of his clerk £30.

GENERALLY BADLY DONE,

The coming of the mail coach brought into being a new body of men, the mail guards and the coachmen. The guards' wages were about half a guinea a week, but they received much more in tips, and some of them earned £300 a year in that way. Being, moreover, the newspapers of the time, carrying news and gossip from town to town, they were always in demand at the local hostleries, and their weakness was very cleverly hit off in a set of anonymous verses called "The Mail Coach Guard."

In this are introduced the names of nearly all the famous inns of the period. Guards were fined for carrying fish, poultry or anything of the kind on their own account, and they were forbidden to blow their horns in passing through towns during the hours of divine service on Sunday, a regulation which was recently revived in regard to the horns of motor omnibuses. The principal cause of fines with regard to the drivers was losing time on the road.

In days of war the coming of the mail coach was eagerly awaited in the market place of each town, and on the occasion of any great victory, as at the Nile or Waterloo, the horses were decorated with laurel and flags were flown on the coach. The guard then donned his best scarlet coat and and blew his horn with might and main. Sometimes he would even discharge his blunderbuss, and generally did everything he could to indicate that he was the bearer of glad tidings.

Each big town had its special distributing centre for news, and there all the blods of the town gathered to receive the earliest intelligence. In Glasgow the Tontine Coffee House was the recognized place, but London had a

ON THE FARM

SHREDDED FODDER.

A correspondent of "Hoard's Dairyman," speaking from personal experience, says:

"Men grumble at the small income from the farm and neglect to notice that no other business could be so wasteful and not utterly fail. Shredded fodder is one way of making a valuable feed out of that which is too often left in the fields to 'waste its sweetness on the desert air.'"

The experiment stations tell us that 1½ tons of good shredded fodder is equal to a ton of the best timothy hay. Also that corn which produces 60 bushels an acre will make said ton and a half of fodder. My own experience leads me to believe that these are conservative statements.

This fall we cut 28 acres of fodder to feed during the winter and save our timothy hay to sell next spring. Ordinarily it isn't considered good farming to sell hay, but at prevailing prices we believe we are justified in so doing. Part of the money the hay brings will be used to buy bran and oilmeal, which can be combined with the fodder and corn so as to produce a balanced ration for cattle and horses.

Fodder should be cut when the ears have all begun to dent and glaze. Then it will make a feed which is palatable and nutritious. In this vicinity two-thirds of the farmers let their fodder get so ripe before they cut it, that much of its feeding value is lost. Generally it will be perfectly safe to shred after the corn has been cut six weeks. Sometimes it will do sooner, depending on the weather and the ripeness of the corn when cut. We have never had a particle of fodder to mold and spoil. On the contrary it comes out of the mows looking so fresh and green and appetizing that we think it worth two-thirds as much as the same amount of either timothy or clover hay.

If it hasn't been standing in the shock long enough to be thoroughly cured at the time you shred, be very careful to manage the blower so the fodder will be kept level all over the mow. If allowed to form a big pile in the middle, that part will settle down so solid that it will spoil. Several times when the machine was late getting round to our farm, we have put a man in the mow to level it off and tramp it down, thus economizing space. However, this is risky business unless it has stood in the shock seven or eight weeks.

We like to have all feed and stock under shelter during winter, and I can think of nothing that would sooner cause me to leave the farm than to be compelled to go to the field on a snowy, blustering morning and get fodder for the cattle. "Wilful waste makes woe-ful want." Shredded fodder is one method of increasing the fertility and stock carrying capacity of our farms.

TOP DRESSING WINTER WHEAT.

A correspondent says: "It is the custom among most farmers to plow under the manure hauled upon wheat ground in late and early autumn rather than to use it as a top dressing. As most of the ground plowed under at this time is to be seeded the next spring, it is a question of fertilizing of both the wheat and the clover crops."

As to the clover, there can be no question but that the manure will best aid the growth of the little plants if put on the top of the soil either before sowing the wheat or during the winter. There is nothing like fine stable manure applied as a top dressing to insure a good catch of clover.

One can usually tell just where it has been placed by the appearance of the clover the next season. As for wheat, there may be some question as to whether the manure would be of Season well with salt and pepper and the diced vegetables and a cupful each of shelled peas, lima beans, and corn cut from the cob. Simmer together until all are tender, add some chopped parsley, and serve.

German Cabbage.—Remove all the loose leaves from a medium sized head of red cabbage, divide into fourths, and shred as finely as possible. Remove all the hard white part. Wash in a sieve and put in a kettle with one pint of water and two heaping tablespoonfuls nice bacon fat. Cover and let it cook slowly for an hour. Add one-half cupful white wine vinegar, three heaping tablespoonfuls sugar, a small piece stick cinnamon, a pinch of pepper, salt to taste, and three or four good sized tart apples, peeled and sliced. Cover and cook slowly for two hours longer. Stir often to prevent burning. It must not be too moist. This is nice to serve with roast goose or turkey.

Beef Stew.—For this choose an inexpensive cut having the bone lean and fat. Cut the lean meat into small pieces. Put the bones, trimming, and fat into a saucpan and cover with cold water. Bring slowly to the boiling point, then push back on the fire, where it will simmer slowly for half an hour. Meanwhile dredge the lean meat with salt, pepper, and flour, and brown in a little hot drippings with a few slices of onion. When the meat is well browned, turn in with the liquor and the bones; simmer gently for three or four hours. About an hour before serving, take the bones out of the kettle and add for two or three pounds of meat and bones a half cupful each of sliced carrots and turnips that have been saturated in the dripping long enough to have become slightly cooked. Twenty minutes before serving add four potatoes that have been parboiled for five minutes. At the last, season with salt, pepper, celery salt, strained, stewed tomatoes, and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley. This may be served with or without dumplings.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Newspaper Comforter.—To make a good, cheap comforter take calico for the outside and line it with newspapers. It is cheap and warm.

Fold Skirts to Hang Up.—To hang up the skirt, cotton, or woolen, fold the skirt in four and take a large safety pin and put through the band and hang up.

Skirt from Old Umbrella.—The silk cover of an umbrella that has been put out of commission through accident may be made into a most satisfactory flounce for an underskirt. All but the centre may be cut into rounding ruffles of any width desired.

Laundry Help.—To keep clothes damp sprinkle and fold in a wash tub. The tub holds dampness and the clothes will keep moist for two days. To wash brown linen color the water with tea and it will retain its original color.

Umbrella Clothes Drier.—Take an old umbrella frame and wind the wires with white cloth, suspend by handle from the ceiling near the range. Excellent for drying baby's clothes and other little pieces. If handle is not of the hook kind a hook can easily be bored into a straight handle.

Prevent Colors Running.—Sometimes in washing colored cotton or linen clothes the dark colors will "run" and streak the light stripe. By putting one-half teaspoonful of salt in rinsing water and also in starch water there will be no streaks.

Uses of Turpentine.—Turpentine and soap will remove ink stains from linen. It will exterminate roaches if sprinkled in their haunts. A few drops on a woolen cloth will clean tan shoes nicely. An equal mixture of turpentine and linseed oil will remove white marks from furniture caused by hot water.

Save Shirt Bosoms.—If a stiff bosom shirt is worn out the bosom can be cut and have some idea of the burden of the British prime minister.

MUST ATTEND THE KING.

In addition to all this he may be summoned at any moment to attend the King, and that is a summons that must not be disobeyed. He has to attend the King's privy councils and he must be in evidence when the King entertains foreign royalties or other guests of political importance.

The prime minister must be always accessible. Day after day he must receive deputations from all sorts of public and commercial bodies interested in legislation or administrative policy and he literally dare not refuse to see them.

On the day on which Sir Henry collapsed he hurried up from Windsor Castle, where he had been in attendance on the King and his guest, the German Emperor, to receive a deputation of brewers and others interested in the new liquor legislation which is promised for the next session of parliament. From his official residence at 16 Downing street, where he received the deputation, he drove to the Guildhall, in the old city of London, and was present at the city corporation's lunch in honor of the Kaiser, and from the Guildhall he drove straight to the railway station and travelled more than 200 miles into Wales, where he was to deliver an important political speech that night.

ONLY ONE OF MANY VICTIMS.

Sir Henry is only the last of a long line of premiers who have sacrificed their health for the public service. His immediate predecessor, Mr. Balfour, was ill more than once during his term of office, and immediately after his leaving it he was compelled to take a long rest cure.

Lord Salisbury, who preceded Balfour in the premiership, was a man of extraordinary constitution, but even he confessed that the only way in which he kept himself fit for his duties was by having a hobby. His hobby was chemistry. Lord Salisbury, however, did not last long after his retirement from public life, and his life was undoubtedly shortened many years by the enormous labors of the premiership.

MRS. GLADSTONE'S FAITHFULNESS.

Probably one of the most remarkable workers who ever held this great office was Mr. Gladstone. In appearance he was almost frail, and it is well known that his health was never robust. It is also now common knowledge that he owed his power to continue working as he did to the devoted care of his wife, who, indeed, combined the cares and duties of a wife, a nurse, and a mother.

Another prime minister who suffered from the strain of the office was Lord Palmerston, whose prodigious energy is the subject of special remark by all his contemporary biographers. It is said that Palmerston made it a practice to work ten hours a day at the foreign office in addition to attending to his legislative duties. He had a desk constructed at the foreign office at which he used to stand, because, he said, if he fell asleep the fall would wake him.

William Pitt, the first earl of Chatham, was perhaps the only case of a premier who was actually killed by his work when in harness. He was suffering from a serious breakdown when a parliamentary crisis arose, and against the advice and entreaties of his physicians he insisted on going to the house. When there he was seized with the attack which terminated in his death.

BURSTING SHELLS.

"U's a poor soldier yez are," banted Larry.

"Phoy should yez say that?" replied Denny, in injured tones. "During th' great battle wasn't Oi where th' shells wor thickest?"

"Yez wor thot! Oi hurr-rud th' corporal say yez got so scared yez went into a barn awn stuck yer head into an egg crate, becad!"

and drew his morn with might and main. Sometimes he would even discharge his blunderbuss, and generally did everything he could to indicate that he was the bearer of glad tidings.

Each big town had its special distributing centre for news, and there all the blods of the town gathered to receive the earliest intelligence. In Glasgow the Tontine Coffee House was the recognized place, but London had a General Post Office in Cloak lane, Dowgate Hill, in 1660, and a new one was opened at the Black Swan, in Bishopsgate street, a year or two later. Subsequently the headquarters of the postal service in the British Isles down to 1829 was at Sir Robert Viner's mansion in Lombard street.

De Quincey's description of the run of a mail coach on a summer's night from the Gloucester Coffee House to Bristol is well known, but in the winter it was a very different matter. Many stories are told of snowed up mails and of guards and coachmen frozen to death at their posts. This was especially the case in Scotland. In the Annual Register, in February, 1795, we read:

"My letter of two days ago is still here, for though I have made an effort twice I have been obliged to return, not having reached half the first stage. Two mails are due from London, three from Glasgow and four from Edinburgh. Neither the last guard that went for Glasgow on Thursday nor he that went on Wednesday have since been heard of."

ANOTHER KIND OF POSTMAN

was he who went around the town after the ordinary collections of letters from the receiving offices had been made to gather in late letters for the mail. This custom remained in force in Dublin until 1859, though it had been abandoned in almost every other city years before. Each of these bellmen, a shrew were called, carried a locked leather wallet, into which, through an opening, letters and other articles were placed. For the convenience of this arrangement those who posted letters into the late fee bag paid one penny on each letter and halfpenny on each newspaper in addition to the ordinary postage as a personal fee to the man. The profession appears to have been a fairly profitable one.

The postmen of those days needed to have a great deal of patience. The prepayment of letters was not compulsory and senders of letters often left the receivers to pay for them. This involved delay and sometimes two or three visits to the house before the work was done. The streets, moreover, were not named or numbered systematically as they are now (numbering first began in 1764 with New Burleigh street and Lincoln's Inn Fields) and addresses were frequently long and incommensurable. Thus in 1762 we learn that a letter was addressed to "Mr. Archibald Dunbar of Thunderstone, to be left at Capt. Dunbar's writing chamber at the Iron Revell, third storey below the cross, north end of the close, at Edinburgh."

"THE BETTER THE DAY, ETC."

"Tommy," said a young lady visitor, "why not come to our Sabbath school? Several of your little friends have joined us lately."

Tommy hesitated a moment. Then suddenly he exclaimed: "Does a red-headed kid by the name of Jimmy Brown go to your school?"

"Yes, indeed," replied the new teacher.

"Well, then," replied Tommy, with an air of interest, "I'll be there next Sunday, you bet. I've been layin' for that kid for three weeks and never knew where to find him."

ONE RESOLUTION BUSTED.

"John! John! wake up," called an excited wife. "I know there are burglars in the house."

"There you go again," muttered the irate husband. "And you promised to swear off all that nonsense."

aid the growth of the little plants if put on the top of the soil either before sowing the wheat or during the winter. There is nothing like fine stable manure applied as a top dressing to insure a good catch of clover.

One can usually tell just where it has been placed by the appearance of the clover the next season. As for wheat, there may be some question as to whether the manure would be of more value if plowed under or put on the surface, but the experience of most farmers has convinced them that top dressing is best for wheat, and some are even practising it for corn and all crops.

It is certain that top dressing will give quicker results, for the young plant gets the nourishment sooner and it appears to be of greater benefit to the crop.

If the manure is rather coarse it can be applied after the wheat is sown, or even during the winter, if it must be spread, but if put on with a manure spreader it can be spread at any time, even before the wheat is sown if not spread too thickly.

The only objection is the heavy draft of the spreader on plowed ground. On soft or low ground it might be better to leave the manure until the ground is frozen before applying it with the spreader.

Top dressing is being practised more and more by farmers as the theory long advocated by scientists. The manure when put on top leaches through the surface soil during rains, but if plowed under much of it leaches downward beyond the reach of young plants, and if the soil is leachy it may go beyond the reach of roots altogether. The scientist tells us that one load of manure spread evenly on the surface is worth two plowed under for most crops, and I think experience teaches the same lesson.

MUTTON CHOPS.

Give the sheep all the clover or mixed hay they will eat up clean.

If the ewes are not in fine condition, they should have a grain ration of wheat bran, ground oats and peas. About one half pound of grain to each sheep will be a profitable ration.

The doors should be wide open so that the sheep will not be injured by passing through them.

Do not neglect to provide plenty of pure, clean water. It is necessary for the health of the flock. It does not pay to let sheep eat snow to satisfy their thirst.

Lack of exercise in ewes during winter means weak lambs at yarding time. Sometimes the feeder must compel the ewes to exercise by feeding them at a distance from the barn. Confinement in close yards always means more or less in work and dead lambs.

Feed them well so they will make a good growth.

Those intended for the butcher should be fattened and sold before the young lambs come.

Sometimes we may get ewes to own their lambs by feeding them by hand till the dams have a good supply of milk. To hasten this time, give the ewes plenty of nourishing food.

Be sure the sheep barns are well ventilated. One night's overheating in a close stable will cause colds.

INSURANCE CO. GIVES FREE TEETH.

The Berlin branch of the Imperial Insurance Company has set aside the yearly sum of $25,000 for the purpose of providing a dental institute in the city for working men holding its policies. The institute will provide artificial teeth for all working men needing them. It has been found by the company that men provided with good dental apparatus make a better risk than others, and the new institute is expected to save much money to the company in the course of a few years.

The good die young—especially good resolutions.

scramble occurred, for during that year, the rapacious and unprincipled Conservative politicians divided among themselves no less than 10,326 square miles of timber limits, covering 6,608,640 acres of land, the property of the tax payers of Canada.

This hungry horde secured the vast tract mentioned above absolutely free of cost. Not a cent was exacted—The unfaithful men in charge of public affairs divided the property of the people among themselves at the rate of 22,500 acres a day for three hundred working days.

The question is—who got the limits? The following are a few of the men who grabbed the timber of the Dominion, and who got it for nothing.

Women Who Wear Well.

It is astonishing how great a change a few years of married life often make in the appearance and disposition of many women. The freshness, the charm, the brilliance vanish like the bloom from a peach which is rudely handled. The matron is only a dim shadow, a faint echo of the charming maiden. There are two reasons for this change, ignorance and neglect. Few young women appreciate the shock to the system through the change which comes with marriage and motherhood. Many neglect to deal with the unpleasant pelvic drains and weaknesses which too often come with marriage and motherhood, not understanding that this secret drain is robbing the cheek of its freshness and the form of its fairness.

As surely as the general health suffers when there is derangement of the health of the delicate womanly organs, so surely when these organs are established in health the face and form at once witness to the fact in renewed comeliness. Nearly a million women have found health and happiness in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It makes weak women strong and sick women well. Ingredients on label—contains no alcohol or harmful habit-forming drugs. Made wholly of those native, American, medicinal roots most highly recommended by leading medical authorities of all the several schools of practice for the cure of woman's peculiar ailments.

For nursing mothers, or for those broken-down in health by too frequent bearing of children, also for the expectant mothers, to prepare the system for the coming of baby and making its advent easy and almost painless, there is no medicine quite so good as "Favorite Prescription." It can do harm in any condition of the system. It is a most potent invigorating

Mr. Perley, a Conservative member in the House, cited an instance of a certain limit which had been alienated by the Government for $500, and the limit was now, he said, worth $500,000. Strange to say, Mr. Perley was once the owner of this very limit, and after paying $250 for one year's rent he allowed it to revert to the Government upon the ground that it was valueless.

Retort a Great Surprise.

When the debate on the timber policy of the Liberal Government commenced, the men who precipitated it, Messrs Lake and Ames, being new members of the House, did not anticipate that they were bringing down a hornet's nest upon their party. To understand the ludicrous character of the incident, it must be remembered that these two gentlemen clearly indicated that the administration of the Liberal Government with regard to timber had been so contrary to the interests of the people that the only remedy was to turn out the Government and install the Conservatives in power, and they would deal honestly and justly.

When Mr. Turriff gave to the House the startling revelations of shameful trafficking in timber limits which had characterized the Conservative administration, how that the limits had been given free to senators, politicians, defeated Conservative candidates and party workers, the Conservatives were at once put on the defensive. When Mr. Turriff read from a long list in his hand name after name of Conservatives who were then members of the House, some of them ex-ministers of the crown

POLITICAL NEWS!

Driven to desperatemethods by their many abortive attempts to discredit the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Conservatives have had the audacity to compare the administration of the timber lands under a Liberal government when in power.

No comparison more disastrous to the Conservative party could have been invited, nor one more welcome to the Minister of the Interior. The facts have only to be stated for the people to pass judgment upon them, and that judgment will undoubtedly endorse the policy of the Liberal government, and it cannot fail to carry also a severe condemnation of the Conservative administration.

Tories and Public Trust.

The Conservative government for eighteen years regarded the public domain, lands and timber, as a perquisite to be divided among Conservative Senators, Members of the House, defeated candidates, party workers and prominent supporters of the party generally throughout the country. No regard whatever was given to the public interest, no care exercised to secure just compensation to the treasury in exchange for valuable concessions, the prevailing idea was to take advantage of the power they had and give generously to members of the party.

How People Were Robbed.

No sooner did the Conservatives gain power in 1878, than the process of looting commenced. With each year the raid on the timber continued until the year 1883, when the very acme of cupidity was reached, and a veritable Former Conservative member for Ottawa.

These are examples showing a few only out of 212 who secured free timber limits from the Conservative Government in the year 1883 alone.

Bolder Looting Each Year.

The following shows how the rapacity of Tory politicians grew, and how the shameless demands of their supporters were satisfied.

In 1881 twenty-one timber limits were granted; area 995 square miles.

In 1882 ninety-eight timber limits were granted; area 4,642 square miles.

In 1883 the Conservative Government granted no less than 209 timber limits; area 10,326 square miles, free.

In eighteen years, from 1875 until the Conservatives were driven from office in 1896, they gave away no less than 29,322 square miles of timber limits, an area equal to 18,766,080 acres. Of this 23,987 square miles, equal to 15,351,680 acres were disposed of without one cent of equivalent going to the treasury.

Vivid Contrast.

Compare the above with the record of the Liberal Government. In 11 years, since 1896, when the Liberals came into power, they have alienated only 6,456 square miles, or 4,131,840 acres, and for this they have received the sum of $528,878.20, or an average of $81.92 per square mile. In addition to this the ground rent amounts to $30,000 per annum, and there is also a stumpage imposed of 50 cent a thousand feet.

In other words the Conservatives gave away for nothing in one year, 1883, to themselves, to senators, politicians, contractors, and party friends, 3,870 more square miles of timber than the Liberal government has granted altogether since they assumed office in 1896.

In one year the Conservatives gave away for nothing 10,326 square miles of timber limits, and the Liberal Government, since they came to power, have granted only 6,456 square miles of timber, and for this they received $528,878.80.

Foster a Timber Grabber.

The Conservatives in the House, led by Geo. E. Foster, the mythomaniac, are now engaged in challenging the policy of the Liberal Government with respect to the administration of timber lands. Among other things, it is suggested (for the Conservatives never permit their tactics to reach the dignity of a direct charge) that limits were improperly granted to friends of the Government. Would the people of Canada be surprised to learn that Geo. E. Foster, the advocate of purity in politics (who was once unseated for corrupt practices), himself applied for fifty miles of a timber limit, but when he found there were other competitors he calmly withdrew his application. This considerate politician declined to enter into competition for the limit: so long as he could get it for nothing, all was well; but when he found he might have to pay something the limit ceased to interest him. This is the gentleman who says the Government has acted improvidently by giving away limits for less than they were worth. He applied to get one free.

feated Conservative candidates and party workern, the Conservatives were at once put on the defensive. When Mr. Turriff read from a long list in his hand name after name of Conservatives, who were then members of the House, some of them ex-ministers of the crown who had received between them thousands of square miles of timber for nothing, consternation seized the Tories, and they jumped up one after another asserting nervously that they had never paid rent and not kept the limit. But the climax was reached when the honorable gentleman announced that the immaculate, honest critic, Geo. E. Foster, had applied for a free slice of the people's property. Mr. Borden was visibly perturbed at this additional instance of the hypocrisy of his chief lieutenant. Mr. Foster made no denial, he could not, but after Mr. Turriff had taunted him with declining to proceed with an application for a limit, when he found he could not get it for nothing, and had then succeeded in putting in an application for another man who got the limit, Mr. Foster treated the matter as a joke, and said "I must look these up." Mr. Foster was a member of parliament when he applied for these limits.

Tories Self Condemned.

The Conservatives this time have taken hold of something so hot that it sticks: they cannot let go of it. The position would not be so serious for them were it not that they expected to gain prestige in the country by exposing lack of attention to the people's interest, instead of which they have precipitated an exposure of their own political peifly and administrative crookedness which stamps them as utterly unfit to conduct the affairs of Government.

What Will Electors Think?

What will the electors say of men who divided among themselves, when they had the power, 10,326 square miles of timber in one year, without paying a cent for it, and criticise a Government that never sold one mile of timber since they came into power excepting by open competition to the highest bidder? There is one thing the electors certainly will not say, and that is, good and faithful servants enter into the joys of another season of power. It is not customary to place a burglar in the position of caretaker, neither is valuable property usually entrusted to those who have been unfaithful to their trust. Politicians who fell over each other in their indecent scramble to secure limits which were of little value in 1883, could not resist the temptation to avail themselves of their greater opportunities if given the chance to acquire similar property with its increased value of to-day.

The gravamen of Conservative charges is that the limits of the West have been disposed of in advance of public requirements. How then can they defend disposing of 29,322 square miles between 1878 and 1896, as was done by the Conservative Government. They don't pretend to.

How futile would it be for the Conservatives to attempt to justify the giving of 10,326 square miles of timber in the year 1883, when there was scarcely any settlement in the West, and this area given, not to lumbermen, not to settlers, but to speculators and politicians at a time when there was practically no demand for lumber?

How can the Conservatives justify base criticism of the Liberal Government for granting 6,456 square miles of timber in eleven years, at a time when settlement in the West has reached immense proportions, and there is a steady demand for lumber? With this additional fact in view, that every acre was put up for public competition and in every case went to the highest bidder?

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had. For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. ### Administration Was Honest.

Liberal administration of timber lands has been honest, and in addition has produced a large revenue for the people, and has reduced the necessity for taxation to that extent. Conservative administration of timber lands was a public scandal and a national disgrace. Their policy added to the wealth of the individual party worker, it increased the substance of the party supporter, but it worked a great injustice to the people at large. Conservative ministers of the Crown, senators, speculators and defeated Tory candidates made money, but the people paid the price, because the resources of the country were impoverished that these men should become rich.

The next time Conservatives challenge comparison between their Administration and that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government they should be careful to look up the doings of the men who were in office and who suffered defeat at the hands of the people for their misdeeds, and the unfortunate but scandalous transactions of prominent men in the party would not experience such disgraceful exposure as that to which they had to submit last week.

A CELEBRATED HOAX.

Story of the Fortsas Catalogue and Its Author.

CLEVER AND BRAZEN FRAUD.

This Ingenious Publication Completely Fooled the Savants and Bibliophiles of Europe and Was the Literary Sensation of Its Day.

When P. T. Barnum cynically remarked that the American people loved to be fooled he might just as well have left out the adjective, for that Americans are much more gullible than natives of other lands can very readily be called into question by anybody at all familiar with the history of hoaxdom. I suppose that for pure effrontery and ingenious brazenness the Fortsas Catalogue stands in the front rank of deception. Yet this pamphlet was foisted not upon the American public, but upon the savants and bibliophiles of Europe—men skilled in the art of books and in the detection of forgery. So cleverly was this fraud conceived and executed that it deserves to stand in the front rank of any consideration, however brief, of clever deceptions.

The Fortsas Catalogue was published in 1840—a small book purporting to be the catalogue of the private library of a certain Count J. N. A. de Fortsas of Binche, in Belgium. Although the book consisted of but fourteen pages and listed only fifty-two titles, it stirred up a veritable teapot tempest among the wise heads. The reason was not far to seek—not one of the books mentioned in the catalogue was to be found in any other library or publisher's list! They were all absolutely "sole surviving" copies of intensely interesting works. In the words of the catalogue itself, "the count pitilessly expelled from his shelves books for which he had paid their weight in gold—as soon as he learned that a work up to that time unknown had been mentioned in any catalogue." Each new research of learned investigators into the book lore of antiquity, it was claimed, "had thinned still further the already decimated ranks of the count's sacred battalion." Weary of his tremendous and self imposed task of collecting only unique specimens, the count was stated to have died on Sept. 1, 1839, and his library was now offered for sale. Apparently the fraudulent character of such master foolery was quite patent. Yet the high brows "bit" enthusiastically, and there resulted one of the most amusing incidents of the decade.

For instantly the learned book lovers were up in arms, each trying to outdo his rival and secure for himself the most precious of the treasures at the sale which was advertised. Orders poured in from all over Europe on the behalf of scholarly societies, libraries, royal families and literary epicures. One bookseller came all the way from Amsterdam just to see No. 75, the "Corpus Juris Civilis." The Princess de Ligne "for the honor of her family" ordered No. 48 at any price to suppress it on account of certain discreditable family episodes it was supposed to contain. Many other prominent persons and institutions clamored for a chance at the collection. "Men remembered having seen books that never existed," says William Shepard. "The foreman in Castellan's printing

A JAPANESE DINNER.

Plenty of Variety, but Too Much Salt For American Palates.

"I am afraid you won't like it," said the young Japanese baron. "You insisted, though, on a real Japanese dinner. So what was I to do?"

They seated themselves, the three girls and he, upon the green silk cushions placed on a parquetry floor about a little table a foot high. A Japanese servant entered with the tea, and the Japanese dinner began.

For first course there were sweet biscuit and tea—delicate tea of the April harvest, "first chop" tea, formerly served with cherry spoons and a poem for each guest.

Next came ushio, a salty soup, with which the national wine, called sake, was served in flat saucers.

The third course was a little raw fish, very salty and steeped in a sour and appetizing sauce. The guests, contrary to their expectation, found the raw fish no more difficult to eat than raw oysters. With this course went a salad of white chrysanthemums.

The elaborate fourth course consisted of boiled chestnuts and a paste of sharks' fins, quail roasted and hashed with preserved cherries and crawfish with eggs. These viands were all arranged decoratively on one large dish.

The fifth course, also on one dish, was boiled bamboo shoots with soy, salted mushrooms and a cold boiled salmon and cold boiled perch, with pickled shoots of the ginger plant.

Next came a soup of seaweed, bitter, salty, decidedly good; next an assortment of nuts boiled in soy; next salt relishes; next delicious boiled rice, the grains as large as cherries, and, to conclude, tea again.

The young girls as they rose from their low cushions and limped about in the effort to get the stiffness out of their legs said that the Japanese dinner had been very good, really much better than they had counted on, but perhaps a little too salty for occidental taste.—Exchange.

ignorance of the predatory classes may render such aid necessary.

From one of the anecdotes related it appears that honor among thieves is not always to be found.

"One day," says the writer, "I went to Croydon and touched for a red toy (gold watch) and red tackle (gold chain) with a large locket. So I took the rattle home at once. When I got into Shoreditch I met one or two of the mob, who said: 'Hello! Been out today? Did you touch?'"

"So I said 'Usher' (yes). So I took them in, and we all got canon. When I went to the fence he bested (cheated) me because I was drunk and only gave £8 10s. for the lot. So the next day I went to him, and I asked him if he was not a-going to grease my duke (put money into my hand).

"So he said 'No.' Then he said, 'I will give you another half a quid,' and said, 'Do anybody, but mind they don't do you.'

"So I thought to myself, 'All right, my lad, you will find me as good as my master,' and left him. Some time after that affair with the fence one of the mob said to me:

"I have got a place cut and dried. Will you come and do it?"

"So I said: 'Yes. What tools will you want?'"

"And he said, 'We shall want some twirls and the stick (crowbar), and bring a Neddie (life preserver) with you.' And he said, 'Now don't stick me up (disappoint); meet me at 6 to-night.'

"At 6 I was at the meet (trysting place), and while waiting for my pal I had my daisies cleaned, and I piped the fence that bested me go along with his old woman (wife) and his two kids (children), so I thought of his own words, 'Do anybody, but mind they don't do you.'

"He was going to the Lyceum theater, so when my pal came up I told him all about it. So we went and screwed (broke into) his place and got thirty-two quid and a toy and tackle which he had bought on the crook (dishonestly). A day or two after this I met the fence who I'd done, so he said to me, 'We have met at last.'

"So I said, 'Well, what of that?'"

"So he said, 'What do you want to do me for?'"

"So I said, 'You must remember you done me, and when I spoke to you about it you said, "Do anybody, but mind they don't do you." That shut him up.'—London Tit-Bits.

A Witty Irish Judge.

Mr. Doherty, who was chief justice of the Irish court of common pleas from 1830 till his death in 1846, was famed for his wit. The gossip in the hall of the four courts, which of course reached the bench, was that one of the judges had been somewhat excited by wine at an entertainment in Dublin castle on the previous evening. "Is it true," the chief justice was asked, "that Judge — danced at the castle ball last night?" "Well," replied Doherty, "I certainly can say that I saw him in a reel."

"As I came along the quay," remarked one of the officers of the court whose face was remarkably hatchet shaped, "the wind was cutting my face." "Upon my honor," replied the chief justice, "I think the wind had the worst of it."—London Law Notes.

to contain. Many other prominent persons and institutions clamored for a chance at the collection. "Men remembered having seen books that never existed," says William Shepard. "The foreman in Casteman's printing office at Tournay had distinct recollections of a bogus volume credited to his press."

Unfortunately the advertised sale never came off. On the 9th of August, the day before it was to have begun, the Brussels papers announced that the town of Binche had determined to keep the collection intact by purchasing it with public funds. The amusing part of this statement was that Binche was a most insignificant village, quite unable to purchase much of anything, let alone a universally desired library. Still, even that statement was believed.

The truth eventually transpired that the Count de Fortsas, his miraculous library and the catalogue were all the creations of an ingenious fellow named Rene Chalons, living in Belgium. His catalogue begot a rather extensive literature of its own, which has since been collected and published under the title "Documents et Particularites Historiques sur le Comte de Fortsas." A copy of the original catalogue now rests in the Congressional library at Washington.

A Surprise For St. Kilda.

The inhabitants of the lonely isle of St. Kilda were astonished one winter some years ago at the appearance of a great blood red, conical object floating on the wild Atlantic billows to the westward of the isle. With much difficulty the derelict was brought to shore, and as the St. Kildans had never before seen such a queer looking thing and could make no guess as to its purpose or place in the scale of created things they indulged in wild visions of its valuable nature. But when the factor came across on his yearly visit from the neighboring but distant island of Great Britain he identified it as a great iron buoy which, it subsequently appeared, had broken away from its moorings in New York harbor and drifted in the gulf stream across the Atlantic. It had taken two years in the passage.

The New Cook's Way.

A new cook was in the kitchen, and the mistress was trying to be pleased with the way she served dinner. The salad was especially unappetizing, with large, coarse green lettuce leaves instead of the crisp, white little hearts the family was accustomed to.

"What did you do to the lettuce?" mildly inquired the lady of the house after dinner.

"Sure, I washed it all good," replied the new cook.

"But the small white part?" persisted the mistress.

FLEET ANIMALS.

The Wonderful Speed Developed by the Greyhound.

Representations of the greyhound appear upon sculptures over 3,000 years old. There is no doubt that it is one of the very oldest fixed types of dog and the most universal in its distribution. India, Arabia, Persia, are among the countries that for ages past had the greyhound. Lately there was exhibited in England a greyhound from Afghanistan—a shaggy form suited to that mountain land. Of course these dogs are not all exactly greyhounds in the western sense, but they are essentially the same in type; they are "gazehounds," long legged, light built dogs, bred to run their game by sight and not by scent and to overtake it not by wearing it down, but by sheer speed and skill of running. How this type was evolved affords much interesting speculation.

"A greyhound is probably the fastest creature that moves upon the earth," says a breeder of those animals. "It is on record that a greyhound beat the famous race horse Flying Childers. An absolute trial between horse and greyhound is difficult to bring off, because, while the horse can be ridden at top speed, it is impossible to insure that the greyhound will run 'tell he can.' But a dog that can start, say, fifty yards behind a hare and overtake it within another fifty, and this is about what a greyhound does, must surely be faster than anything else that lives or has his parallel only among the birds."

The same writer says of greyhound coursing: "One used to hear that it was a 'pothouse,' not a 'gentleman's' sport. But I have heard men who follow both declare that they prefer coursing to racing, and I can quite understand it. In coursing there is the absolute certainty that all is above suspicion of anything 'shady.' Every time a dog is run he is honestly run to win or divide the stakes. You cannot 'pull' a greyhound."

EAT ORANGES

IF YOU WANT TO KEEP WELL

Careful tests have proved beyond question that orange juice has clearly defined medicinal virtues. Those who suffer with indigestion—are compelled "to diet"—and that after eating oranges regularly for breakfast there is no distress, no palpitation.

Where there was a tendency towards constipation, the eating of oranges regulated the bowels.

In skin troubles, those who began the morning meal with an orange were noticeably improved.

There is, however, a quicker way to get better results. This is to take one or two "Fruit-a-tives" tablets at bedtime in addition to the juice of an orange before breakfast the next morning. "Fruit-a-tives" are the juices of oranges, apples, figs and prunes, in which the medicinal action is many times intensified by the special way of combining them. Valuable tonics are then added.

Take the juice of an orange before breakfast—take "Fruit-a-tives" at night—and you will quickly be rid of indigestion, Stomach Troubles, Constipation and Biliousness. "Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c a box—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price by "Fruit-a-tives," Limited, Ottawa.

FESTIVAL OF THE DEAD.

Eskimos Provide Food and Clothes For Returning Ghosts.

The natives of the Yukon river region hold a festival of the dead every year shortly before Christmas and a greater festival at intervals of several years. At these seasons food, drink and clothes are provided for the returning ghosts in the clubhouse of the village, which is illuminated for the occasion with oil lamps. Every man or woman who wishes to honor a dead friend sets up a lamp on a stand in front of the place which the dead one used to occupy in the clubhouse. These lamps, filled with seal oil, are kept burning day and night until the festival is over. They are believed to light the shades on their return to their old home and back again to the land of the dead. If any one fails to put up a lamp in the clubhouse and to keep it burning, the shade whom he or she desires to honor could not find its way to the place and so would miss the feast. When a person has been much disliked his ghost is sometimes purposely ignored, and that is deemed the severest punishment that could be inflicted upon him. After the songs of invitation to the dead have been sung the givers of the feast take a small portion of food from every dish and cast it down as an offering to the shades. Then each pours a little water on the floor so that it runs through the cracks. In this way they believed the spiritual essence of all the food and water is conveyed to the souls. With songs and dances the feast comes to an end and the ghosts are dismissed to their own place. The dancers dance, not only in the clubhouse, but also at the graves and on the ice if the dead met their deaths by drowning. On the eve of the festival the nearest male relative goes to the grave and summons the ghost by planting there a small model of a seal spear or of a wooden dish, according as the dead was a man or a woman. The totems of the dead are marked on these implements. The dead who have none to make offerings to them are believed to suffer great destitution; hence the Eskimos fear to die without leaving behind them some one who will sacrifice to their spirit, and childless people generally adopt children lest their shades be forgotten at the festivals.

As Good as the Zoo.

"Will you come with me to the zoo this afternoon?"

So, you see, I have no need to go to the zoo to see strange creatures."

MR. GEO. H. THOMPSON.

At Work On the Farm and Feeling Well All the Time.

Geo. H. Thompson, Craft, Miss., writes:

"I have been cured of catarrh by your medicines, Peruna and Manalin. I had been affected with catarrh of the stomach about all my life, and was taken bad every Spring and Summer.

"I used several kinds of patent medicines, but they did me no good. I then took a treatment under an M. D., which did me but little good. By this time I had come to where I could eat nothing but a little soup. I had severe pains, had lost in weight and could not do anything. I began taking your medicines, Peruna and Manalin. I then weighed 128 pounds, but after taking several bottles of Peruna and one bottle of Manalin, I weighed 165 pounds.

"I am now at work on the farm and feel well all of the time. I eat all I want to and my friends say that I look better than ever before. I will ever praise Peruna for its healing power."

Pe-ru-na is a Systemic Remedy.

If Peruna proves efficient for catarrh in one place, it will be equally potent in any other place, because it is a systemic remedy.

The people generally are very much misinformed as to the nature of catarrh.

Catarrh is usually believed to be confined to the head, nose and throat. Lately we sometimes hear of catarrh of the stomach and catarrh of the bowels. Seldom if ever, do we hear of catarrh of any other organs.

It is not because these organs are not subject to catarrh, nor that catarrh of these organs is not a very common disease, but simply because it is not generally known that affections of these organs may be due to catarrh.

MR. W. J. TEMPLE.

Climatic Ailments Overcome By Pe-ru-na.

Mr. W. J. Temple, R. F. D. 3, Delaware, Ohio, writes:

"I am a farmer and so necessarily must be exposed to all kinds of weather. About three years ago last winter, I was taken sick with bowel and stomach trouble.

"One doctor called it ulceration of the bowels, another called it colitis. Another doctor helped me temporarily.

"Then a druggist recommended Peruna and I followed his advice. I took altogether five bottles and I consider myself a well man.

"Before using Peruna, it was utterly impossible for me to do a day's work but now I can do farm work without the least trouble or fatigue. I consider Peruna the best medicine and tonic of the market.

"I had not eaten a meal for five years without distress until I took Peruna. I have recommended it to several friends with good results."

The Company's Guarantee.

An EVANS VACUUM CAP will be sent you for sixty days' free trial. I you do not see a gradual development of a new growth of hair, and are not convinced that the Cap will completely restore your hair, you are at liberty to return the Cap with no expense whatever to yourself. It is requested, as an evidence of good faith, that the price of the Cap be deposited with the Chancery Lane Safe Deposit Company of London, the largest financial and business institution of the kind in the world, who will issue a receipt guaranteeing that the money will be returned in full, on demand without questions or comment, at any time during the trial period.

The eminent Dr. I. N. LOVE, in his address to the Medical Board on the subject of Alopecia (loss of hair) stated that if a means could be devised to bring nutrition to the hair follicles (hair roots), without restoring to any irritating process, the problem of hair growth would be solved. Later on, when the EVANS VACUUM CAP was submitted to him for inspection, he remarked that the Cap would fulfil and confirm in practice the observations he had previously made before the Medical Board.

Dr. W. MOORE, referring to the invention, says that the principle upon which the Evans Vacuum Cap is founded is absolutely correct and indisputable.

An illustrated and descriptive book of the Evans Vacuum Cap will be sent, post free, on application.

condition. I failed from 165 pounds down to 119. I was advised to go to the Rockies or to the coast. I went to both places under heavy expense. I continued to fail, and was advised by the doctors to come home as nothing more could be done for me. Hope seemed to have left me.

"I tried Psychine and since starting its use I have gained from 119 to 141 pounds. I have used $10.00 worth of the medicine. I am a well man and I cannot say too much in praise of Psychine. The strongest recommendation would be weak in view of the fact that I believe it has saved my life. It is without doubt the best remedy for run-down conditions and weak lungs. "I sincerely hope and trust that you will continue your good work of saving run down people and consumptive from the grave. Wishing you and Psychine continued success, I remain, one of Psychine's best friends."

Office Boy's Little Coup.

The office boy in a downtown office has framed up the following schedule of the firm's office hours, which is displayed in a prominent place on the wall: "9-10 reserved for book agents and people with various things to sell, 10-11 for insurance agents, 11-12 bore with long stories, 1-2 solicitors for church and charitable institutions, 2-3 discuss sporting news with callers, 3-5 miscellaneous social visitors. N. B.—We transact our own business at night."

A Financier.

"Father," asked Rollo, "what is a financier?"

"A financier, my son, differs from the ordinary business man in being able to make the government sit up and worry when his affairs do not go right."

The Only Fault.

Guest—Waiter, bring me some rice pudding. Waiter—Er, 'fraid I can't jess recommend the rice puddin' today, sir. Guest—What's the matter with it? Waiter—Nothin', sir, 'cept there ain't none!—London Scraps.

Sheridan on being asked how we came to call Gibbon "luminous," answered, "I said 'yo-luminous.'" ground, the visible part rarely exceeding a few inches. But the remarkable feature of the stem is that it is often fourteen feet in circumference and becomes more or less a two lobed image. The stem looks more like a great mass of "the burned crust of a loaf of bread," to quote Dr. Welwitsch's letter, than the trunk of a tree. The underground portion becomes greatly elongated, and its continuation is the top root of the plant. This goes down several feet in its effort to get the few drops of water that the arid conditions of the country permit.

There are never more than two leaves after the seed leaves drop off, and very curious leaves they are. Starting from a groove on opposite sides of the depressed mass, they stand straight out on both sides of the plant. They are often six feet long and two feet wide and usually split into ribbons that undulate over the ground in a way strikingly suggestive of the tentacles of an octopus. With its great ugly body and its tentacle-like leaves it is no wonder that it has been the most remarkable plant novelty of the last century. The flowers are borne in scarlet cones on a cymose inflorescence coming from the crown of the trunk.

Tumbea bainesii belongs to the joint fir family, or guineaceae, and is known only from Portuguese West Africa to Damaraland. This is a region that seldom gets any rain, and desert conditions prevail almost completely, except for the sea fogs. The tumbo is thus a desert plant par excellence, and it is only by a close approximation of these very arid conditions that we can cultivate it.

Question of Nationality.

An Englishman, a Frenchman and a German sitting together in the smoking room of an ocean liner, the conversation turned on their nationality, and one of them asked what each of the three would choose to be if he were not of his own nation. The Frenchman said, "If I were not a Frenchman, I would be an Englishman." The Englishman said, "If I were not an Englishman, I would wish to be one." The German, "If I were not a German I would wish not to be a German."—Carl Peters in Deutsche Monatschrift.

On Yawning.

I have come to the conclusion that if a man yawns and you don't want to yawn, too, the only way to prevent it is to blow your nose. A man of my acquaintance boasts that he can set a whole railway carriage full of people yawning by merely taking time over it himself, and I believe he can.—Fry's Magazine.

First Visitor—Most interesting country round about here. Have you seen the ruins? Second Visitor (who has just paid his bill)—Yes; I suppose you mean the guests leaving this hotel.—London Answers.

Same Old Reason.

"I've played the ponies to my grief year in, year out, day after day." "Then why do you keep at it?" "Well, I've got a good thing for tomorrow."

KEEP OFF ALL CATARRHAL ILLS BY TAKING PE-RU-NA.

Pe-ru-na, a Most Reliable Remedy For All Climatic Ailments.

MR. GUSTAV SCHMIDT.

MR. HENRY SCHROEDER

Chronic Catarrh of Head and Throat Lasted Thirty Years.

A Letter Praising Pe-ru-na.

Mr. Gustav Schmidt, Spring Valley, Ill., writes:

"I had catarrh of the head and throat for over thirty years. It became worse every year. About three months ago I commenced to take Peruna and Manalin, and now I am entirely cured of that troublesome sickness. Your medicine is surely a blessing to mankind. You can truly say that you have not lived in vain, Doctor, and I thank you for the good you have done me. May you enjoy a long life to help suffering humanity."

DR. HARTMAN, THE FARMER.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, the inventor and original manufacturer of Peruna, is one of the best farmers in the Middle West. His farm comprises several thousand acres of the best land in the State of Ohio, located near the City of Columbus.

As an importer of French Percheron and German Coach horses, the Doctor has not an equal in this country.

The fowl-raising department is a marvel of ingenuity and perfection; but, perhaps the dairy department is where the Doctor shows his greatest sense of order and sanitary science.

His milk cows, of the purest Jersey stock, have all been subjected to the tuberculin tests, and he gives to the City of Columbus a pure milk, certified by the Board of Health.

The milk stables, the milk men and the whole process of milking are absolutely faultless and clean.

The Doctor himself, past 70 years of age, is the managing head of the farm.

He himself supervises the working details of every department.

He is a model of strength and vitality, and since Peruna is the only remedy he ever makes personal use of, his physical condition is a testimonial to the efficacy of Peruna of greater value than could be framed in words.

Dr. Hartman is one of the few doctors who take their own medicine and his splendid physique and strength in his old age are an eloquent argument for Peruna very difficult to gainsay.

Dr. Hartman, being a farmer himself, knows what the farmer needs and in speaking of Peruna to the farmer he speaks to his own kind of people.

Pe-ru-na For Bowel Trouble.

Mr. Stanley Bell, Ashley, Ohio, writes: "I was afflicted with rheumatism so badly that it was painful for me to move. I took two or three bottles of Peruna when I began to feel better. It also gave me relief from bowel trouble."

MR. J. B. ALEXANDER.

A Necessity in the Home.

J. B. Alexander, publisher of the "Fruit and Floral Guide, a Magazine of Horticulture," published in Hartford City, Ind., says of Peruna:

"I was afflicted with catarrh of the throat and head for over ten years. I was treated by many physicians, but grew worse until I was seldom able to go out in cold weather.

"About one year ago I was advised to try Peruna, which I did, and I am now entirely well of the catarrh.

"Peruna is a necessity in our home. With the first symptoms of a cold we use it, and are never afflicted with catarrh.

"I advise all who are afflicted with catarrh to try Peruna. There is certainly nothing equal to it as a catarrh medicine."

71 Years Old and Able to Work.

Mr. John G. Hirdler, Garfield, Kas., writes:

"I was injured by a fall on the railroad and my entire nervous system was impaired by the same. The help of a physician was useless.

"I then tried Peruna and after using it for three months was entirely well. I am 71 years old and my work on the railroad is hard and tedious, but I can work like a young man in all kinds of weather, heat, cold, rain, snow or storm alike."

Pe-ru-na, a Household Remedy.

Mr. Henry Schroeder, Estey, Mich., writes:

"I suffered for almost ten years with catarrh of the stomach and all doctoring was of no avail. I took nine bottles of Peruna and two of Manalin and am now entirely cured.

"I recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this disease. It is my household friend."

One of Dr. Hartman's Grateful Correspondents.

Mr. W. R. Callahan, proprietor of Big Hill Farm, and prominent fruit grower and stock raiser, Glenvar, Va., writes:

"I write to express my kindness toward you and your good medicine, Peruna.

"I had a very bad spell of sickness and could not eat anything at all. My head, stomach, in fact, my whole body ached, and it looked as though nothing would do me any good. I had almost given up.

"I decided to try a bottle of your Peruna and before I had taken half the bottle my appetite came to me and my head became all right. In fact, I was all right all over. Peruna cured me."

While Peruna is not confined to any one class of people, yet it is probably true that the farming class more than any other, rely upon Peruna for the prevention and cure of all climatic diseases.

TOWNSHIP OF RICHMOND

The members present were Messrs. R. W. Paul, Reeve, and Councillors, Alf. McCutcheon, E. R. Sills, C. H. Spencer, Manly Jones, the Reeve presiding.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Moved by C. H. Spencer, and seconded by E. R. Sills that the Treasurer pay School section No. 16 the sum of $18.00, said sum to be placed on the Collectors Roll against said section in 1908 in addition to the requisition for this year. Carried.

Color of the Sky and the Moon and the Hues of the Stars.

It is the atmosphere that makes the sky look blue and the moon yellow. If we could ascend to an elevation of fifty miles above the earth's surface, we should see that the moon is a brilliant white, while the sky would be black, with the stars shining as brightly in the daytime as at night.

Furthermore, as a most picturesque feature of the spectacle we should notice that some of the stars are red, others blue, yet others violet and still others green in color. Of course all

THE MYSTERY OF SLEEP.

No Man Knows When the Moment of Unconsciousness Comes.

There is a remarkable fact connected with sleep which must not be overlooked. The sleep of a human being, if we are not too busy to attend to the matter, always evokes a certain feeling of awe. Go into a room where a person is sleeping, and it is difficult to resist the sense that one is in the presence of the central mystery of existence. People who remember how constantly they see old Jones asleep in with the stars shining as brightly in the daytime as at night.

Furthermore, as a most picturesque feature of the spectacle we should notice that some of the stars are red, others blue, yet others violet and still others green in color. Of course all of the stars, if we bar the planets of our own system, are burning suns, and the hues they wear depend upon their temperature.

The hottest stars are blue. Thus Vega, in the constellation Lyra, is a blue sun hundreds of times as large as our own solar orb. We are journeying in its direction at the rate of millions of miles a day, and at some future time it may gobble us all up.

For, after all, humiliating though the confession be, our sun is only a very small star—of the sixth magnitude or thereabouts—and of an importance in the universe so slight as to be scarcely within the pale of respectability—Reader Magazine.

NATURE AND A WOMAN'S WORK

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Nature and a woman's work combined have produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers they relied upon the roots and herbs of the field to cure disease and mitigate suffering.

The Indians on our Western Plains to-day can produce roots and herbs for every ailment, and cure diseases that baffle the most skilled physicians who have spent years in the study of drugs.

From the roots and herbs of the field Lydia E. Pinkham more than thirty years ago gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills, more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now recognized as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

Mrs. J. M. Tweedale, 12 Napanee Street, Toronto, Canada, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I was a great sufferer from female troubles, had those dreadful bearing down pains, and during my monthly periods I suffered so I had to go to bed. I doctored for a long time but the doctor's treatment failed to help me. My husband saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and got a bottle for me. I commenced its use and soon felt better. I kept on taking it until I was well and an entirely different woman. I also found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made childbirth much easier for me. I would recommend your Vegetable Compound to every woman who is afflicted with female troubles."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Tweedale, it will do for other suffering women.

Moved by C. H. Spencer, and seconded by E. R. Sills, that the Treasurer pay School section No. 16 the sum of $18.00, said sum to be placed on the Collectors Roll against said section in 1908 in addition to the requisition for this year. Carried.

Moved by C. H. Spencer and seconded by Manly Jones, that this Council give $5.00 to the Hospital for sick children in Toronto, and also $10.00 to the General Hospital in Kingston. Carried.

Moved by Manly Jones and seconded by Alf McCutcheon, that this Council accept the tender of Elias Jackson to furnish four thousand feet of bridge covering, five inches thick, and 14 feet long at $21.00 per thousand, to be delivered as ordered by the Reeve. Carried.

A notice was received from Herrington Warner and Grange, in reference to the cleaning out of the snow and ice that may accumulate in the ditches on the public road commonly known as the Sheffield Road, lying between Ohas. Anderson's and Wm. French's, in the 7th concession was read, and laid on the table.

Moved by E. R. Sills and seconded by Alf McCutcheon, that the Auditors Report be received and laid on the table until the next session of this Council. Carried.

Moved by C. H. Spencer and seconded by Alf McCutcheon, that this council purchase a snow plough from Wesley Prandon for the sum of $50.00. Carried.

Moved by E. R. Sills and seconded by Alf McCutcheon, that the auditors, Messrs T. V. Sexsmith and C. N. Lucas be paid the sum of $23.00 for their services for auditing the township accounts for 1907. Carried.

Moved by Alf McCutcheon, seconded by E. R. Sills, that C. H. Spencer be paid $7.40 for supplies for stone crusher for 1907. Carried.

Moved by E. R. Sills, seconded by C. H. Spencer, that A. Wood receive $11.80 for supplies for Thos Sovereign. Carried.

Moved by C. Spencer, seconded by Manly Jones, that we give John McFarlane $6.00 per day for furnishing one engine, one team, two men, one gravel wagon, one belt, one water tank, to be used on the township roads under the directions of the township engineer. Carried.

Moved by Alf McCutcheon, seconded by E. R. Sills, that the following accounts be paid: Dr. Burrows medical attendance to Magdalene Fralick, $15.00; Dr. Burrows medical attendance to D. Sedore, $3.00; Supplies for Magdalene Fralick, $9.50; Chas McBride for removing Magdalene Fralick to General Hospital at Kingston, $8.95; Mrs. Desbaine for attendance and making up clothing for Magdalene Fralick, $10.00; Thos. McTegart for aid, $5.00; Municipal Ward for supplies, $8.25. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the council adjourn to meet on the first Monday in March at which time all pathmasters, pound keepers and fence viewers shall be appointed. Carried.

Swiss Naval Wars.

References to the Swiss navy are usually jocular, but it is none the less a fact that ships of war once floated and even fought on the waters of the lake of Geneva. The great fleet was that of the Duke of Savoy, who at the beginning of the fourteenth century maintained a number of war galleys armed with rams and protected by turrets and propelled by a crew of oarsmen varying in number from forty to seventy-two. These vessels besieged Versoix and even blockaded Geneva. But Geneva also had a fleet which helped in the capture of Chillon in 1536, and when the Bernese annexed the canton of Vaud they, too, had their flotilla. Their largest vessel was the Great Bear, with 64 oarsmen, 8 guns and 150 fighting men.—Westminster Gazette.

Mrs. Galbraith of Shelburne, Ont., was a Great Sufferer from Indigestion, the Bane of so many Lives—South American Nerveine Released its Hold—It Relieves in one Day.

"I was for a long time a great sufferer from indigestion. I experienced all the misery and annoyance so common to this ailment. I spent a great deal on doctors without receiving any permanent benefit. I was strongly recommended to try South American Nerveine. After using only two bottles I am pleased to testify that I am fully restored to health, and I have never had the slightest indication of a return of the trouble. I recommend it most heartily." (6)

HIS FIRST THOUGHT.

President McKinley's Devotion to His Invalid Wife.

In the early days of the Spanish war Mr. McKinley and Mark Hanna were engaged in a close and serious evening conference in the president's room. The time ran along to the hour of 9. Suddenly those busy in the outer room saw President McKinley rise and leave the apartment, saying, "Wait a few moments, Mark." He was gone about twenty minutes. In the meantime Senator Hanna walked restlessly between the two rooms, speaking a word or two to the secretaries and showing plainly that he shared with the president a feeling of deep anxiety as to the outcome of the military proceedings. He remarked on the fact of great shortage of supplies and from his words and bearing revealed to the assembled few in that outer room that the president and his closest advisers were lying awake nights and working to make up for the deficiencies of the military situation.

When the president returned he and Senator Hanna resumed their anxious consultation. Then the president's secretary remarked to one who was near him:

"I suppose you wonder why President McKinley got up so suddenly and left without a word to any one. You saw how anxious he was about the military situation. Even that would not cause him to break away from what has come to be the custom of his early evening.

"About the same time every night, when he hears a signal from the other side, he knows that Mrs. McKinley is ready to retire and wishes to see him. No matter how busy he may be nor how deeply engaged in any subject, he invariably drops everything on the instant and goes to their own apartments. There he sits by the bedside and reads a chapter in the Bible to Mrs. McKinley. Then he waits a few moments until she is quiet, tiptoes back to the door, comes over here to the office and without a word takes up the thread of his work and keeps it up until toward midnight."

matter, always evokes a certain feeling of awe. Go into a room where a person is sleeping, and it is difficult to resist the sense that one is in the presence of the central mystery of existence. People who remember how constantly they see old Jones asleep in the club library will smile at this, but look quietly and alone even at old Jones and the sense of mystery will soon develop.

It is no good to say that sleep is only "moving" because it looks like death. The person who is breathing so loudly as to take away all thought of death causes the sense of awe quite as easily as the silent sleeper who hardly seems to breathe.

We see death seldom, but were it more familiar we doubt if a corpse would inspire so much awe as the unconscious and sleeping figure—a smiling, irresponsible doll, flesh and blood, but a doll to whom in a second may be called a proud, active, controlling consciousness which will ride his bodily and his mental horse with a hand of iron, which will force that body to endure toil and misery and will make that mind, now wandering in paths of fantastic folly, grapple with some great problem or throw all its force into the ruling, the saving or the destruction of mankind. The corpse is only so much bone, muscle and tissue; the sleeping body is the house which a quick and eager master has only left for an hour or so.

Let any one who thinks sleep is not a mystery try to observe in himself the process by which sleep comes and to notice how and when and under what conditions he loses consciousness. He will, of course, utterly fail to put his finger on the moment of sleep coming, but in striving to get as close as he can to the phenomena of sleep he will realize how great is the mystery which he is trying to fathom.

KING CARLOS AND SON SHOT

Were Slain While Driving From the Railway Station.

A despatch from Lisbon says: King Carlos and the Crown Prince Luiz Philippe were assassinated here at 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

The royal party returned by boat from visiting the fair at Villa Vicosa yesterday, and landed at the quay in Lisbon at about 5 o'clock. Premier, or Dictator, Franco, and one or two other Ministers met them on landing, but did not accompany them. The King's programme was well known, and there was a considerable assemblage of people, mostly of the lower classes, along the designated route. It was a bright afternoon, but it was verging towards dusk when the Royal party entered an ordinary landau to drive to the palace. There was no escort of troops or police, but scattered along the streets to control the crowds was a fairly strong force of policemen.

The King and Queen took the seat facing the horses, and the Crown Prince and Prince Manuel sat opposite them. The carriage started off at a slow trot, and the occupants acknowledged frequently salutes from the crowd. There was little enthusiasm, but the populace was respectful, and there were no signs of the unpopularity which the King's latest decree, giving increased arbitrary powers to the Dictatorship, undoubtedly produced.

The progress of the Royal party was without incident until the carriage reached the centre of the Praza do Commercio, one of the principal squares of the city, close to the Royal Arsenal. Two groups of men, according to one account, then rushed forward from opposite sides, one a little in advance of the other, and threw themselves in front of the carriage, causing the driver to sharply pull up his horses. Their action distracted attention from the other group of five, who ran up in the rear close to the back of the vehicle. Throwing back their long Spanish cloaks, they produced carbines and began firing at the Royal party. The first shot caused the King to leap to his feet and turn his face to his assailants. Shots followed in quick succession, and within another instant three struck the monarch, whose gaitic frame was a mark almost impossible to miss. As he stood for a moment within a few feet of his murderers two bullets entered his neck, one severing the carotid artery, and death was almost instantaneous.

HEROISM OF THE QUEEN AND CROWN PRINCE.

He fell almost into the arms of the Queen, who had struggled to rise, and who an instant later succeeded in throwing herself in front of the Crown Prince. Her son seized her and forced her to his seat, and himself stood in front of her. Only a few seconds elapsed and a second fusillade came from the determined assassins. The brave young Prince fell, dying, and his brother received a flesh wound, which covered his face with blood. By this time a handful of police within reached recovered from their paralysis of horror, rushed forward and opened fire upon the assassins.

The Queen at that moment was despairingly attempting to beat off a man from the side of the carriage with a bouquet. Her escape was marvellous. Capt. Freire, a cavalry officer, and a soldier killed this regicide as he was about to fire a revolver point blank at her Majesty.

The police fired indiscriminately, killing two other men who are believed to have been of the assassins' party. A wild panic followed, most of the spectators fleeing in all directions.

The driver within a moment or two whipped up his horses and drove at a gallop to the Arsenal. The vehicle was quickly inside and the gates closed. The Queen by this time was in a state of collapse, but she assisted in removing the body of her husband, who was quite dead. The Crown Prince still breathed, but within five minutes he expired before medical aid could reach him.

THE SENTENCE.

"To be hanged by the neck . . . and may the Lord have mercy on your soul!" The man in the dock, a young fellow with a pleasant face and steady blue eyes, listened to the terrible words that doomed him to the gallows without flinching. He was very pale, but his mouth was firm, and there was no faltering in his voice as he said quietly, "I am innocent, my Lord. God help me!"

Then a woman's scream rang out pitifully, and the prisoner gave one agonized look towards the crowded gallery as he turned, obedient to the touch of a warder's hand, and walked out of the ken of his fellow-men for evermore. Death was to be his companion for a few days, and would then claim him as its spoil at the hands of Justice.

"He's innocent! I know he's innocent! And they're murdering him."

That was the burden of the girl's moan day by day as the sun rose and set, and at each setting brought her sweetheart horribly nearer the hangman. And with that cry alternated another: "If I could only see the Queen! If I could only ask the Queen to spare my Jack till he could prove his innocence!"

It became the one dominating idea of her brain that an appeal to the august Lady, who was yet a most tender and merciful woman, would save her lover's life. That he would be proved "not guilty" if only time were granted she had no doubt. She was equally confident that her entreaties would win a reprieve if only she could have speech with the Queen; but that was impossible. Her brother, very gentle in his sympathy, but remorseless in his common-sense, told her so a dozen times. They were only poor folk, and, to the poor, Royalty are as far off as Heaven.

She could not even reach the Queen with a letter, he told her, for letters pass through many hands before they reach the Throne. One could speak to God direct, but a Sovereign could only be addressed through a secretary. He knew, too, that there was little to be said for the condemned man in cold argument.

The story of the crime was plain and simple. Rivalry between two men for a woman's love; a quarrel, a fight, which the successful suitor had none the best of. Then, a few days later, the discovery of the other man's dead body, stabbed in the back; beside the corpse a knife, proved to belong to his rival; a coat, stained with blood, found in the room of the latter.

The evidence was circumstantial but convincing; the defence, an alibi, with no witness to support it. But the girl's faith never wavered, and always she moaned, "If I could only speak to the Queen!" And always her brother said, "It's impossible, my dear, quite impossible."

One night, when only a few days remained for her lover to live, the girl woke up from an uneasy sleep in her chair to find her brother standing beside her. He was oddly excited, and the hand with which he gripped her shoulder trembled.

"Clara, my girl," he said, "I'll do it. You shall speak to the Queen."

"Oh, how, Jim, how? Will she see me?"

"No, she'll not see you, nor you her. But you shall speak to her, my lass,

THE SEQUEL.

It was most irregular. It was most scandalous. The Lord Chamberlain was horrified. The managing director of the Electrophone Company was in despair, and expected nothing less than decapitation. The Queen, naturally, demanded explanations, and received a technical account of the manner in which a wire could be tapped, and the manner in which this particular wire had been tapped. But the tragedy of the story appealed to her more than its comedy, and her woman's heart moved her to a most unusual exercise of the Royal prerogative.

Without recommendation from the Home Secretary, the prisoner under sentence of death was reprieved on the eve of the day fixed for his execution, and before twelve hours had passed the wisdom of mercy was amply proved.

For in the small hours of next morning a wild-eyed man, half-mad with drink and remorse, forced his way into a London police-station and made confession of the crime, and the easy means by which he had fastened the guilt of it on his fellow-lodger, from whose room he had abstracted knife and coat.

So Jack received the formality of a "pardon," and Clara before her marriage had another and more pleasant interview with the Queen, carrying away with her the memory of many kind words, and a Royal wedding present to commemorate the message carried by the phone to the Throne.—Pearson's Weekly.

DISTRESS IN GERMANY.

Depression in Trade is Producing Serious Results.

A despatch from Berlin says: Depression of trade in Germany is becoming audible and visible. Several attempts have been made by processions of unemployed to demonstrate in Unter den Linden, but the police lost little time in dispersing them. In the debate in the Reichstag on Friday afternoon on the high discount rate, Count Kanitz declared that in Berlin alone 25,000 skilled artisans were out of work. At a meeting held on Thursday at Cologne, the chief burgomaster promised to dismiss the Italians in the employment of the municipality in order to provide work for distressed Germans. A large mass meeting of unemployed also took place at Dusseldorf Thursday.

He died almost upon the same spot where his daughter was killed by an electric car a short time ago.

side her. He was oddly excited, and the hand with which he gripped her shoulder trembled.

"Clara, my girl," he said, "I'll do it. You shall speak to the Queen."

"Oh, how, Jim, how? Will she see me?"

"No, she'll not see you, nor you her. But you shall speak to her, my lass, as close as if you whispered in her ear. Now, don't ask me anything. Don't breathe a word to anyone. Go to bed, and from now till to-morrow night think only of what you'll say to the Queen when you get your chance."

She obeyed, and the man sat down to ponder over the details of the daring plan that had flashed across his mind an hour before, as he did his accustomed work at the electric switch-board on the stage of the Royal Opera House.

It was about ten o'clock on the following night, and the wind was howling round the chimney stacks and evoking resonant music from the network of wires that were supported by heavy posts on the roof of a house near Covent Garden. For an hour a man had been working among these vibrant wires, listening to the message of one and another until he had discovered what he sought—a wire that carried a burden of melody very different from the song of the wind.

Now his work was done, and he stood on the roof and laid his hand on the shoulder of a woman who knelt beside him.

"It's very nearly time, Clara," he said. "You're not afraid?"

"No, I'm not afraid, Jim." And her voice was steady, though every nerve in her body quivered with excitement. "All right. When I call 'Now,' lift the receiver and speak on the moment. And put your heart into it."

No need to tell me that. As she clambered again up the post she raised to her mouth a little open box, and waited with parted lips.

"Now!" The sharply hissed word came to her from the darkness above, and with one choking sob she poured out her soul in passionate supplication.

From the posts above a wire ran east and west, charged with a message of life or death. One end, now silent and disconnected, ended on the stage of the Opera House. The other, stretching out into the blackness of the night, crossed street and roof, valley and hill, and river, till it clambered up the walls of a Royal palace twenty miles away, passed through roof and floor and ceiling to end in the private rooms of the Queen.

There the little Lady who ruled a mighty Empire sat in silence, attended by only two of her ladies. Each of the three held to her ears the quaint listening apparatus of the telephone, and through the storm and the darkness came from the distant theatre the golden voice of Caruso.

As it drew to its glorious close and ended in that marvellous note of the lark that melts one's heart to water, sudden silence cut the melody like a sword. Then, instead of the roar of applause instinctively waited for, came a woman's sob, and following it a rush of desperate words:

"Oh, my lady, my Queen, have mercy! They're going to hang my darling, my Jack, and he's innocent, he's innocent, he's innocent. Don't let them take his life, Your Majesty! He's to die in two days, and there's no one to plead for him but me, and I'm only a girl. But you are a woman, my lady, and you know what it is to lose one you loved. Give him time to prove his innocence, only a little time. I love him so, I love him—"

Then the voice broke into a wail of exceeding bitterness, and Clara's audience of the Queen was ended. Far away on the London house-top the man among the wires made a rapid connection, and the listeners in the Palace, as they lost the cry of a woman's heart,

Direct Summe

A despatch from Montreal says: "It was decided at the annual meeting of the Montreal Corn Exchange on Wednesday afternoon to make renewed efforts to secure a direct Summer line of steamers between this port and the West Indies, in order to increase trade relations between Canada and those islands. It was the general opinion of the members that this was the only way to increase the mutual trade, on the ground that Halifax and St. John were too far removed from trade centres to build up the trade.

Figures produced showed that the

FADS AND FANCIES.

Tricorn hats are coming again. Natter blue is becoming one of the favorite hues.

Muffs and short cravats of glossy seal-skin are not uncommon.

Even in daytime gray hair can be beautified by adornment with lovely silver gauze or a snood of silver ribbon.

Many pretty tailored gowns are made of the soft cotton velvet that is called "franellet."

Negligee sacques of knitted shellani wool are almost unsurpassed for novelty as well as for their delightful warmth.

Toques of swansdown and ermine over youthful faces are even lovelier than the dark fur hats.

Circular skirts seamed up the middle of the front are being turned out by all the great French costumers.

Long pendant earrings decorate the ears of many of the most fashionable women.

Petticoats no longer "stand out," under the new French gowns; they must drop as limply around the feet as chiffon.

Springlike silks shimmer already in the shop windows, and checks and stripes are both prominent.

The check is larger than the pin checks of other years, on the new silks, and mostly it is in two tones of the same color.

Stripes are rather wide, and they will, it is said, be made up so as to wind diagonally around the figure.

A pretty stripe is in light blue, Nile green, and pearl, the latter stripe being the widest.

An interesting departure in style is the change in embroidery. New designs are daring, some of them being taken directly from rugs and even from stained glass windows.

Handsome crepe veils with border edges of beautiful hand embroidery now belong in mourning millinery, and the present day styles in mourning are so vastly different from a few years ago that now no one need dread putting it on. All the modern hat shapes are copied in mourning goods and ornamented with dull finish jet or enamel.

Silk is more in evidence for evening gowns this season than the gauzes, laces or spangled nets. Silks are indeed having an almost unprecedented winter run, not only the plain ones, but striped and daintily flowered ones.

The velvet coat refuses to lengthen its sleeves and so shorten the stretches of white glove which are becoming to it. Velvet bodices of the day are nearly all made with lace sleeves, and many of these sleeves are quite long.

The culsey coat is the garment har-

SAVED A WOMAN'S LIFE

Splendid Act of Bravery of Walter J. Scott Cost Him His Life.

A despatch from Montreal says: The facts connected with the death of Walter J. Scott on Tuesday night show that he died in order to save the life of another. Mr. Scott was a brakeman on the local running to Vaudeville, and among the passengers was Mrs. Legault of Strathmore. When her station was reached she started to get off, and in some way descended on the wrong side of the train just as the International Limited from Chicago came thundering through. The Limited did not even slow down at Strathmore, and a few horrified passengers who witnessed the scene thought that the woman had stepped to certain death, for there seemed no possibility of her escape, the train being almost upon her. She stood rooted to the middle of the track with fear, and those who saw her there involuntarily closed their eyes.

The next moment, screaming with fear, Mrs. Legault was lying in the snow bank at the side of the track un-harmful, while the great wheels of the engine quickly ground the life out of Brakeman Scott. He had witnessed the woman's awful predicament, and, without hesitating for a second, jumped to her rescue, and, catching her in his arms, threw her to one side, and an instant later was killed by the locomotive.

Those who witnessed the brave act say that Brakeman Scott must have known when he leaped to the woman's rescue that he had not one chance in a thousand of saving his own life, and state that his action was one of the bravest that could be imagined. He was twenty-nine years of age and lived at 31 Hyde street, this city. The sad part of the affair is that he leaves a bride of only three months.

Henry Wheatley of St. Henri, engineer of the International, admitted that the rules had been violated, inasmuch as the station had been passed at full speed, but said that on account of the storm he did not see the train standing at the station.

COAL RANGE EXPLODED.

Strathroy Man's Miraculous Escape From Serious Injury.

A despatch from Strathroy says: Mr. I. H. Dampier, manager of the Bank of Commerce here, had a most remarkable escape from instant death on Thursday. Mr. Dampier had been in Toronto, and upon his return lighted the coal range in the kitchen, which had been out for a day or so, allowing the waterfront and pipes which carried the water to the bathroom to freeze. Mr. Dampier was sitting in the kitchen waiting for the fire to burn, when suddenly there was a tremendous explosion, and the stove was blown to pieces, one lid being blown through the ceiling, making a clean cut. The fire bricks were scattered in all directions, and the plaster blown off the walls. Strange to say, Mr. Dampier was not hit by the flying debris, and escaped entirely unhurt. The loss will be about $150.

THE ROOF COLLAPSED.

A Young Boy's Narrow Escape in Pictou Rink.

A despatch from Pictou says: The lives of nearly forty young boys, skating in Boutilier's Arena, were endangered at noon on Saturday. A very heavy snowstorm had passed over the county, and about two hundred tons of snow weighed down the roof, which, with scarce a moment's warning, caved in. No one was seriously injured, though Joseph Grooms had a particularly narrow escape, being caught and pinned under the falling roof. Mr. Grooms saw the collapse coming, and rushed out on the ice and warned the children off. The loss on the arena is placed at $20,000.

THE METAL BOUNTIES.

Amounts Paid by Dominion to Iron and Lead Industries.

A despatch from Ottawa says: During the twelve years that the iron and steel bounties have been in existence the Dominion has paid a sum of $5,108,233 as bounty on pig iron; on steel ingots, $4,459,525; on articles manufactured from steel, such as rolled angles, plates and wire rods, $1,241,473. The bounty upon lead amounts to $742,843, and during the last four years there has been paid out in bounties on the production of crude petroleum a sum of $1,204,135.

BURGLAR SHOT DEAD.

Four Men Assaulted a Nightwatchman at Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: Between 1 and 2 o'clock Wednesday morning a shooting affair occurred at the C. P. R. yards at St. Henri, and as a result Alfred Gosselin is dead. He and three companions assaulted the nightwatchman, who fired in self-defence hitting Gosselin in the abdomen. Gosselin was an old-time burglar, and had served time in both the jail and penitentiary.

HAVE THE DEAD SPOKEN?

Sir Oliver Lodge, Distinguished Scientist, Has Had a Communication.

A despatch from London says: That he has succeeded in obtaining communications from persons well known in London since their death, by means of secret and exhaustive tests recently conducted in connection with Spiritualism, is the astonishing statement just made by Sir Oliver Lodge, Principal of Birmingham University and holder of a long list of distinguished degrees in science, to members of the Psychological Research Society. Three well-known persons named by Sir Oliver Lodge as having sent messages to him through mediums from beyond the grave are the late Edmund Gurney, the late Richard Hodgson and the late F. W. H. Meyers. The latter, a brilliant writer of English prose and a leading member of the Psychological Research Society, died in 1901 at Rome, declaring just before he died that he intended to attempt to communicate with members of the society after his death.

He declared that he intended to attempt to communicate with members of the society after his death.

Sir Oliver Lodge said in part:—"We have received what investigation has proved to be messages from the dead through the medium of Mrs. Piper and Mrs. Verrall, the latter endowed to a remarkable degree with the power to act as a translator or interpreter of the psychical world. We have discovered that there is a new human faculty of communicating with the dead. The most important set of phenomena are those of automatic writing and talking. Well-known persons, including those named, are constantly purporting to communicate with us with the express purpose of patiently proving their known personalities and giving evidence of knowledge appropriate to them."

DISINFECTANTS.

In the popular mind a disinfectant, an antiseptic and a deodorizer are one and the same thing; even Litre, who was a physician and should have known better, in his dictionary of the French language, defined a disinfectant as a substance which destroys bad odors.

A deodorizer may neither destroy germs nor even prevent their growth; an antiseptic prevents their further development, but does not necessarily destroy them; but a disinfectant may justify its title, kill all the germs where it is applied. Nevertheless, it may not remove the odor of putrefaction, for it may have no destructive action upon the already formed products of bacteria, and it is these that are smelly.

The principal disinfectants used to prevent the spread of an infectious disease are corrosive sublimate, carbolic acid, chlorin, chlorid of lime, caustic lime, sulphate of copper, formaldehyde and sulphurous acid, and heat, usually in the form of steam. One or the other of these is used, according to what it is desired to disinfect.

For the disinfection of a room a gaseous substance must be used, but to render innocuous the discharges of a fever patient, a liquid or a readily soluble solid is necessary. The most generally useful all-round disinfectant is probably formaldehyde, or rather its solution, formalin. This is volatilized in order to disinfect a room which has been occupied by one with an infectious disease, or the solution is added to any discharge which it is desired to disinfect.

Sulphurous acid, obtained by burning sulphur, is also used to disinfect the sick-room; but it is regarded with some disfavor, because it does not act well if the air of the room is very dry.

For mixture with the discharges of the patient, chlorid of lime or caustic lime, corrosive sublimate and carbolic acid are used. Copperas-sulphate of iron—is often employed for this purpose, but it is useless unless the contact is to be very long, as when the discharges mixed with the copperas are thrown into a hole in the ground and buried there.

Limbs itching from frost should be soaked occasionally with a rag soaked in kerosene. It is known by experience that frost can thus be removed.

A good way to prevent colds is to save a pair of summer hose. If it is raining hard or there is a deep snow to plow through, cut off the stockings' feet, pull over the shoe and up over the other stocking, then put on rubbers and you keep dry.

If you have a toothache and want to put some cotton in your tooth, wind cotton around a nut pick; most people use a toothpick, and the cotton always sticks to the wood so you can't get it in the tooth. I have tried the nut pick and it is much easier to get into cavity.

Air a Cold Cure.—Take a long, deep breath as soon as you go out of doors. Then hold it as long as you possibly can. Repeat this several times as you walk along. You will be surprised the way it will make your blood circulate. Hence a sure preventive, also cure, if faithfully tried, as a cold can be summed up in one word, "stagnation." Aside from the daily bath, the feet should be bathed at least once a day. This is a matter of a few minutes and insures neatness, rest, and comfort. A warm bath with an ounce of sea salt in it is about as restful as a nap. Pad-dle in it until it cools, dry with a rough towel, put on fresh stockings, have a change of shoes, and the woman who was "ready to drop" will have a "good understanding" in ten minutes.

"She vowed she wouldn't marry for ages. He swore he would wait for all time." "Well?" "They compromised, and made it a week."

TRACKED TO MONTREAL

Italian Arrested for a Four-Year-Old Murder.

A despatch from Montreal says: In a little wooden shack in the eastern part of the city five of Chief Detective Carpenter's men captured, on Thursday night, the alleged perpetrators of an atrocious murder. The man's name is Giuseppe Bacari, and it is charged against him that on the 15th of April, 1904, near Conneaut, Ohio, he murdered a fellow-countryman named Pasquale Barthoni. Nearly four years have elapsed since the murder was committed, and all that time a cousin of the murdered man has been patiently tracking the murderer and at last has run him to earth in Montreal.

On April 14, 1904, Bacari was penniless. It was charged that he met his friend Pasquale Barthoni in the town of Conneaut, Ohio, and knowing that Barthoni had money, persuaded him to walk out into the woods near the railway track where they resolved to camp for the night. Barthoni seated himself on a stone, the other getting behind his comrade, drew out his sheath knife, slashed his throat and plunged the knife several times into the man's body.

Hastily going through the poke's he dragged the dying man to the railway line and laid him across the rails. From the distance he was seen by some men who were just in time to stop an on-coming train and to hear the victim gasp out the story of the crime with his last breath. The murderer fled and has been tracked from town to town by Giuseppe Bar'on, the murdered man's cousin.

The prisoner appeared before Judge Choquet, an extradition commissioner, and protested his innocence but waived all objection to extradition.

Jumper Waist Oriental Design

DAME FASHION predicts that the jumper will retain its place in the spring wardrobe, but who cares for plain clothes in this day of elaborate embroidery?

The design shown today makes a most charming jumper waist, and it is appropriate for almost any material. The embroidery is best done on a hoop, the flowers being worked solid, while the circles may be either eyelet or solid. The center of the buds may be filled in with ladder work.

A most useful jumper is made of black louisine, done in black embroidery silk, or, for a spring dress, nothing could be prettier than a white linen, embroidered with white mercerized cotton, or a colored linen done in its own shade or white. Pongee, too, might be used instead of linen, and if this is of the natural color the design worked out in Persian shades makes a most original and elaborate costume. If this plan is adopted, the small round circles must be worked solid, for, to carry out the Oriental idea, these take the place of jewels.

The edge of the jumper may be either braid or lace, according to the material used. If linen, white cotton braid is most appropriate and washes well; if pongee, heavy clumsy lace insertion will carry out the richness of the costume, even though it be Oriental in design.

Embroidered Filet Net

FILET net, the rage of the season in Paris, is an ideal material to elaborate with intricate embroidery. The square mesh is transparent, so that it may be done from a picture taken from any book or from the design shown in a newspaper. The net is lasted on the picture and the outline is made by darning around the design, using heavy needle and the new coarse wood fiber. When all the outlines are in it is easy enough to fill it in by darning the net closely with silk floss or chenille.

If the net is for a waist to be worn with a linen suit the outline is pretty done in soutache braid, filled in with coarse linen thread. For a dress nothing could be more beautiful than a filet net embroidered in chenille dots, or if an evening dress is to be made the dots may be outlined in chenille and filled in with gold or silk thread or vice versa. The band to go around the open neck and over the shoulders may be a band of net about three inches wide, embroidered solid in gold or silver or chenille.

Sometimes colored or black chenille is an effective trimming and it is wonderful how little time it takes to complete the embroidery for the most elaborate of evening dresses.

Beads, too, may be strung on a thread and darned into the net, or jet and spangles may be used in the same way.

All the newest hats have heavily embroidered bands around the high crowns. These are of gold and silver, or heavy Oriental work, and they add much to the cost of the creation. The same bands may be made at home by embroidering filet net with gold and silver thread or even fine braid, and working a design in heavy, silk floss or wood fiber. A band of beads may be crocheted to the edge, and if this idea is carried out the result should vie in splendor with the best example turned out by the confectioners of Paris or Vienna.

Tan Linen Table Covers

ATABLE cover is made of linen embroidered in white silk floss in dahlia design. The edge of the cover, instead of being finished in the buttonhole stitch, is embroidered with half a skein of the floss tacked to the material at intervals of only a quarter of an inch. This makes a most attractive finish for a cover of this sort.

Another table cover is of tan linen embroidered in white daisies done in renaissance braid. The white on the tan makes a most effective cover, and the design is of that conventional pattern which offends nobody.

A cover of brown is decorated with large tulips made of colored linen. To hold these to the cloth is a bias band of linen stitched on the edge of the flowers. This is a most useful cover

One-Piece Garments for the Easter Bride

LENT is the natural time for the Easter bride to make her trousseau, and what better opportunity could be presented than these few weeks of rest? A trousseau is the most absorbing topic to a girl and to all her friends, and nowadays the patterns are so easily cut and so quickly made up that Easter will not arrive before the completion of the wardrobe.

Lingerie usually claims most of the attention of a bride, because for once in her life she may have all the dainty things she longs for, and there are many loving hands to aid her in the fulfillment of her desire. One-piece garments have made a pretty trousseau a possibility, and have eliminated all the tiresome finishing of sleeves and shoulder seams, which is such a trouble to the amateur seamstress, who is so anxious to get to the lace trimmings and finishing touches.

A corset cover may be cut on a semi-circular pattern, allowing the two fronts to run to the selvedge of the nainsook. Good material of this sort may be purchased for little money, and it wears very well. The best width to buy is one and a quarter yards, for this leaves ample breadth for all garments. The corset cover when cut need only have the beading for the ribbon sewn around the top and bottom, while ribbons over the shoulders are all that are needed to keep the waist up. On the beading the bride sews all the lace that she wants, and if she is industrious the plain front may be elaborated with designs of insertion. This, to be correct, should be basted tightly in place, and, after being sewn firmly, the nainsook may be cut away on the wrong side, leaving the transparent lace.

ON KIMONO PATTERN

Night dresses are cut on the kimono pattern, leaving the entire width of the material for the sleeves. A square hole is cut for the neck, the sides are sloped out from under the arms, the side seams are sewn up and the gown is hemmed. Then lace is sewn around the sleeves and neck, and the design used on the corset cover may be reproduced on the front of the night gown. To still further elaborate the latter, a band of two-inch beading may be sewn around just under the arms, and when wide ribbon is run through this the result is quite empire in effect. A very good plan is to use a different design on each set, so that they may be worn at the same time.

A charming dressing sacque is made of any material—silk, flannel, nain-silk, or flannel. It is a becoming garment, too, for the long points hanging front and back give good lines, and when ribbon or lace is added around the sleeves the result is most attractive.

A flannel skirt is made on the same plan as the underwaist, only to give greater length the semi-circle of flannel is cut less full, so that it is necessary to sew a breadth of the material to the selvedge, and in the middle of this the placket is made. The skirt, too, is faced all round on the right side, and ribbons or buttons fasten it in the back.

PRETTY PETTICOATS

A white petticoat may be cut in the same way and around the bottom a deep flounce added. This method does away with the tedious gores, and the skirt is sure to fit smoothly over the hips, with no superfluous fullness to spoil the fit of the dress. In making a white petticoat the best material for the purpose is "long cloth," for it wears a long time. To this may be added a flounce of finer cotton material, and the petticoat may be as much trimmed with lace as the bride wishes. If a double flounce is desired, the short circular top may be finished with buttons and the flounce with buttonholes, so that at any time it may be washed without washing the whole skirt. She may also make a taffeta flounce to button on, which saves the expense of a whole silk skirt, and when this plan is adopted two circular skirts are all that are necessary, for any number of flounces may be made, and they can always be kept fresh and clean.

For outer clothes a spring coat is cut in the same shape as the old-fashioned triangular lace shawls. As this is the latest thing in lace coats, the same idea could be carried out in filet net or imitation Irish lace if the real article is not obtainable. These are worn over the shoulders, and they hang in a point back and front. It is true that they are not particularly warm for outer wraps, but they give a dressy appearance to the plainest of white gowns. In fact, a most attractive coat may be made of broadcloth, cut in the same way as the dressing sacque, and finished at the neck in broad revers, with the material outlined in gold braid. A coat of the kind would be warm enough for any kind of summer weather, and in winter it may be used as a carriage wrap.

All of the ideas mentioned are easily carried out and are really inexpensive. Thus a bride may have almost her entire trousseau at little cost, while she has the time saved on seams and

Embroidered Corset Covers

NEW corset covers are made in nainsook and embroidered in large dots, done in silk to match the ribbon used. One must be careful in wearing a cover of such distinctive color that it does not show clearly through a lingerie waist to clash with hat or suit.

The dots are made by first outlining them in pencil, then silk. Afterward the center is filled in by a few stitches of solid embroidery. Usually one large circle is made on the left side of the cover and in this the initials of the owner are embroidered in outline stitch.

The dots would be charming, too, done in white mercerized cotton, and the garment would be far more useful embroidered in these than in the more gaudy silks.

In making a night dress and drawers to match the set the dots would be done on the yoke of the former and around the ruffles of the latter. The chemise might have three rows of very large dots around the neck.

The Cross-Stitches

BABY'S bibs are prettily embroidered in the cross-stitch with renaissance braid. The white on the tan makes a most effective cover, and the design is of that conventional pattern which offends nobly.

A cover of brown is decorated with large tulips made of colored linen. To hold these to the cloth is a bias band of linen stitched on the edge of the flowers. This is the most useful cover and one that will not readily soil. If a table cover of drawwork is preferred to those of solid embroidery, it is a very good plan to sew a fancy net to the wrong side of the cover and to cut out the heavy lines so that the net will be left in a definite design. This is easily done, and the edges of the linen may be buttonholed tightly to the net. All these covers are remarkable for the rapidity with which they are completed, and, indeed, most of them are so inexpensive that they are within the reach of any one's pocket-book.

Crocheted Buttons

BUTTONS are to be used as trimming for all the spring dresses, and there can be no better time than the present to make them, so that when the seamstress comes in the spring they will be ready.

For linen gowns the buttons will be covered with linen, but many will wear crocheted buttons, and as these are very easy to make with crocheted hook and coarse cotton, they might as well be started.

First the button is covered with linen to match the suit, then over this is fastened a loose crocheted mesh. Crocheted buttons are also used extensively on the finest lingerie dresses and even on those heavily trimmed with Irish lace.

For a costume of silk or crepe the buttons are covered with black satin and this is in turn covered with crocheted designs done in black knitting silk. Very elaborate buttons can be made by embroidering the covering with a needle, in floss, jet or beads, and sometimes chenille, combined with narrow gold braid, makes buttons that are not only original, but beautiful. Little odds and ends of lace may also be used as covering and sometimes rings covered with silk embroidery, with colored stones, make beautiful buttons for the finish of an evening gown.

For a pongee suit the buttons should be of pongee covered with lace or embroidery, although black satin buttons sometimes improve the rather negative shade of natural pongee.

BRIGHTENING MONKEY LIVES.

Expensive Apes Provided With a Small Boy as Playmate to Keep Them Well.

The Zoological Gardens at Copenhagen have recently acquired two expensive apes, and to keep them in good spirits a small boy has been placed in the cage, whose sole duty is to play with the apes and keep them amused. The reason is explained by a zoological expert.

"It is curious," he says, "how the mood of a chimpanzee influences his health. Keep him cheerful and interested and his innate disposition to die of consumption may be checked. Let him get bored and he will turn his thoughts to the tomb."

A curiously human trait this, supporting the Darwinian theory that the ape is nearest cousin to man in the scale of evolution from the tadpole stage to the form which we now temporarily adopt.

The problem of inducing the two apes to take a more optimistic outlook on life exercised the minds of the zoological authorities in the Danish capital for a long time. They knew very well that their charges pined for amusement, but it was no easy matter to divine what manner of entertainment would appeal to the simian intellect. Finally a happy inspiration induced them to enlist the services of the aforesaid small boy and leave the solution of the difficulty to him.

And there is no doubt that the experiment will be a great success. Only a boy can see eye to eye with a member of the monkey tribe; only a boy understands thoroughly how best to give exhibitions of that elementary humor of the knockabout order which will make an ape clasp his paws in applause.

Did ever a parent take a small boy to

A charming dressing sacque is made of any material—silk, flannel, nainsook or albatross. A slit is cut from one corner to the center of the square, where a round hole is made for the neck. ## Boxes for Wedding Cake

NEW boxes are being made for Easter wedding cakes out of leftover pieces of the bride's gown. Of course, no one would be so extravagant as to provide all the guests with such pretty boxes, but they are given to the bridal party as a sort of consolation prize for those who did not get keepsakes in the shape of rings and trinkets out of the large cake.

Some very wealthy brides are having the initials embroidered on the corner of the box, but the white satin covering is really sufficient, and if the letters on the boxes are a necessity they may be hand-painted in a Japanese style.

If the bride is of a really economical turn of mind she can easily make these little novelties herself, for all that is necessary is to paste the pieces of silk on an ordinary white paper box.

Baby's Quilt

A MOST attractive baby's quilt is made by putting two thicknesses of lamb's wool between surah silk. The quilting, instead of being made with stitches, is caught in place by large roses made of ribbon. Ribbon is also used in the style of art nouveau to decorate the border of the quilt. Usually it is made in long green stems, terminating at the end with large sunflowers, each petal of the flower being a loop of the ribbon caught at the point by a single stitch. Quilts of such an elaborate design are used as coach covers, for the baby indoors does not wear anything quite so exquisite.

the monkey house or zoo without afterward finding that boy emulating the simian gymnastics in the drawing room or any other room or place which offered him the necessary facilities? If so, that boy must have been ill or a hopeless cripple.

It is quite certain that in the matter of monkey tricks the Copenhagen apes will be unable to teach their human companion anything, that is if the companion is the average sort of boy. Many people no doubt will be shocked at the experiment. "Poor boy," they will say, "how demoralizing for him!" Results will probably show that their sympathy were better bestowed upon the apes.

There is another trait of the chimpanzee which shows how like he is to the small boy in certain phases of mental effort. "The chimpanzee," to quote again the zoological expert, "knows he is delicate and expensive, and that a cough from him will send a whole zoological society into an ecstasy of apprehension. From my own observation I know they maliciously use an imitation cough to escape punishment and to attract attention and dainties."

How bovisly human! What parent of a small boy cannot recall occasions when toothache or some other ache has suddenly attacked the juvenile offspring with a pain so excruciating as to render all ideas of devotional or educational duties for the moment impossible? And how many indulgent mothers have found an ache of this description cease so suddenly as it began when the church or school bell has sounded ringing.

It is suggested that if this movement of the Copenhagen authorities for brightening the lives of despondent apes is attended with continued satisfactory results, some such advertisement as the any kind of summer weather, and in winter it may be used as a carriage wrap.

All of the ideas mentioned are easily carried out and are really inexpensive. Thus a bride may have almost her entire trousseau at little cost, while she has the time saved on seams and bindings to put all the hand work on her lingerie where it will make the prettiest effect and be the pleasantest sort of work. There is something fascinating about watching garments grow quickly under industrious fingers, and never has a girl complained of the sewing she must do to trim and elaborate her trousseau.

Sofa Cushion

A MOST charming sofa cushion was made of heavy burlap, with art nouveau tulips or daisies, made in kid, stitched tightly to the background. The effect is best when the latter is in grass green and the conventional decoration is in brown.

Pyrography is also extensively used to outline the kid decorations.

Another sofa cushion is made of the same green burlap embroidered in red poinsettias done in red yarn. The only color to relieve the monotony of the red and green is a little bunch of French knots of yellow silk in the center of the flower.

Another sofa cushion is of tan linen embroidered in a daisy design in the coronation braid. This is a cushion that is more appropriate for the drawing room than the sitting room, but it is nevertheless original and effective.

A New Embroidered Bag

A NEW fad has come to us from the Orient, and it looks as though Japan and China were inexhaustible in their supply of beautiful ideas.

The latest is a bag of embroidered satin fastened by a cord on two bracelets of jade or malachite. The novelty is quite wide at the bottom and grows narrow toward the top, though the whole bag cannot be more than nine or ten inches deep.

Any one can make these of silk left from a dress and use bracelets of silver as handles. Their great advantage is that they cannot slip from the wrist, as do the shopping bags that have been in use for the last few months.

WANTED—Smart boy as companion to young chimpanzee. Must be active, with cheerful disposition. To live in airy and well warmed cage. Apply, etc.

CEYLON HAVING A BOOM.

Trade Outlook the Best Ever Known in the History of the Island.

Ceylon as a whole is experiencing a period of exceptional prosperity and the trade outlook is the best ever known in the history of the island. Tea, coconuts, cacao, cardamoms and citronella are paying well, and rubber and camphor are still more profitable.

There has been a continued boom in rubber planting, which now occupies about 115,000 acres, while tea has had a revival and high prices are now being realized. Camphor prices are very high and the cultivation has been extended so that there are now some 900 acres under this product.

A transportation question that has been agitated in Ceylon for a long while, and that is now being brought actively to the front again, is that of connecting Ceylon to India by a railroad across Adam's Bridge and the shallow bodies of water lying between Rameswaram and Taillamannar at the northern end of the island.

The South Indian Railway Company are bringing their line to the extreme point of the small island of Rameswaram so that only a small gap of water will intervene between the termini of the Indian and Ceylon railways.

If the connection is made at all it will make Colombo the port for southern India, and will greatly benefit the tea

The Cross-Stiches

BABY'S bibs are prettily embroidered in the cross-stitch with coarse embroidery cotton. The designs used are pictures of animals, beads and other things that appeal to the infant mind, and, as the cross-stitch is one of the easiest methods of embroidery, baby's belongings can always be decorated in this way.

First baste a small piece of canvas to the material to be embroidered; then on this sew each cross over four squares of mesh, through the canvas and the material. When the design is finished, the canvas may be pulled away one thread at a time and the design is left on the bib.

Baby's initials should be embroidered on all his belongings, and the cross-stitch is most appropriate for this purpose.

Sometimes, on the white Russian blouses of older children big German letters in red cotton add a touch of ornamentation to the plainness of the dress and gives it an air of individuality that the garment in itself does not possess.

There is something charming and old-fashioned about the stitch that makes it refined and nice, however it is used. Towels and linen sheets are always improved by initials embroidered in cross-stitch, for was not all the linen of our ancestors marked in this way? Some women prefer the initials in white and others in red cotton, but whichever color is chosen the effect is sure to be attractive.

Linen Centerpiece

A CENTERPIECE of linen is embroidered in dahlias made of loops of linen braid held down by a single stitch of white floss. The center of each flower is made of five or six French knots in yellow, and this is the only color on the centerpiece. Nothing could be so attractive and such good form for the dining table as pure white linens, for the moment a color is added to the setting it is sure to clash with the pattern of the china.

Another attractive centerpiece is made of linen edged with a circular border of flint net, which is embroidered in heavy mercerized linen in a conventional design. This is really a rarely beautiful table decoration, and the flint net gives the effect of Mexican drawn-work.

and rubber industries by facilitating the transportation of laborers from India.

LONDON A CATS' ELYSIUM.

You Can Tell It by the Cats You Meet in the Street.

A lover of cats once said that he summed up the general character of the inhabitants of a city by the way the stray cats received his overtures of friendship.

In Paris the cat literally walks alone, as Kipling prophesied it always would. It is impossible to get near enough to one to stroke it. French cats are only seen darting from one alley to another, and apparently always in a state of panic. This arises from the fact that the French are not lovers of animals.

In London it is quite different. London is an elysium for cats. The cats you meet in the street are always sleek and happy and are most friendly.

A cat is really a sort of necessary finish to a London home. Just as the poor little wild bird in a three franc cage gives prestige to a French menage, so a large, well groomed, well fed cat seems to give respectability to an English household.

Stray cats are always well treated there. Of course the day comes when they are gently picked up by a man in uniform and placed in a cart and taken to the cats' home. There they are kept a few days, well looked after, and fed. Then if no one claims them they are sold, if valuable, or else painlessly translated into whatever sort of angel a cat becomes.

Such being the situation it was natural that the nineteenth show of the

French Embroidery Ribbon

A BEAUTIFUL picture frame of white silk embroidered in the large chrysanthemum design with French embroidery ribbon is shown in one of the shops. The splashy uneven petals of this flower lend themselves well to this style of embroidery and the leaves are just the shape to be finished with but two or three stitches when ribbon is used.

Around the edge of the glass is a line of tiny blue bows joined together by twisting the bands of the ribbon tacked down by stitches about an inch apart.

Conventional designs, too, are frequently carried out in the ribbon, and it is quickly done, for only one stitch takes the place of about fifteen minutes' hard work when using ordinary silk.

One of the most beautiful dresses of the season is a black crepe de chine. Heavily embroidered around the bottom of the skirt is a large design done in the ribbon. Pastel colors only are used and the flowers are morning glories and forget-me-nots, while the stems and leaves that twine gracefully around the skirt are done in the lightest of greens. The bands around the décolletage and the sleeves are embroidered in the same way.

French Knots

MANY new dresses are embroidered with French knots in the sleeves are embroidered in the same way.

French Knots

MANY new dresses are embroidered with French knots in most elaborate designs. They are used for solid embroidery, the design itself just outlined and the knots used for filling. Snowdrops and grapes and strawberries are particularly adapted for this sort of work; in fact, any of the usual flowers, with the exception of those intended for wallachian embroidery, may be done in this way.

Some of the new sailor suits for little boys have the eagle embroidered on the sleeve in French knots.

Then, too, they may be done around the outside of any design, and they give a sort of lacy effect to the work.

Beautiful collars and collarettes are ornamented only with French knots done in squares or stripes or circles.

Mourning cuffs and collars are sometimes made in linen with a deep border of knots done in black, and for half mourning a row of purple knots added to collars and cuffs or to the finishing bows and ruchings of the dress makes an easy step toward laying off the somber black.

Bootees of Kid

CHARMING little bootees of white kid are made for the baby and embroidered with the feather stitch in pink or blue silk. The patterns for the diminutive boots is the same as that used for the knitted slippers of older people. First the tiny sole is cut, then the upper. The one is sewed to the other, the seam is fastened at the heel and the top is bound in ribbon. The feather or briar stitching is then put all around the seams and just below the ribbon binding and baby's shoes are finished.

For summer these bootees may be made of white pique and bound all round in white cotton tape or wash ribbon. On these a ribbon must be sewed to the heel, so that it can tie around the ankles; otherwise the light little boot will be lost. These, by the way, are really better for the baby during the warm weather than are the socks of zephyr, and they are far more easily washed.

BRITISH SOVEREIGNS' WRITINGS.

Characteristic Styles Used by the English Sovereigns.

King Henry VIII. wrote a strong hand, but as he seldom had a good pen, he seems to have written with the haste and vehemence with which he spoke, and hence the untimely destruction of many an honest goose-quill.

Edward VI. wrote in a fair, legible, but somewhat effeminate hand, and managed to complete a neat manuscript diary; but the unfortunate boy king had barely learned to write when he ceased to reign.

Queen Elizabeth, thanks to the pains of her assiduous tutor, Roger Ascham, wrote an upright hand, after the manner of the Italian school, and had acquired "all the elegancies of the pen," according to the notions of polite society in the sixteenth century.

James I. wrote a slovenly scrawl, strongly indicative of that personal negligence which he carried into all the little things of life.

Charles I. wrote a fair, open, Italian hand more correctly, perhaps, than any monarch who had preceded him on the English throne.

Charles II. wrote a little, fair, running hand. He often wrote in odd situations, and his natural restlessness and vivacity prevented his penmanship from having the dignity and repose of that of his illustrious but unhappy father.

James II. wrote a large, fair hand, and Queen Anne's writing was round and fair, but a servile copy of that of her writing tutor.

The autographs of the Georges and of William IV. were for the most part "scrawly," but beyond this had no special characteristic.

NO GENERALS NEED APPLY.

Some years ago a traveller in the Western States stopped to converse with a farmer, who had a large number of men at work in his hay-fields.

"Most of these men are old soldiers," said the farmer.

"Indeed! Are any of them officers?"

"Two of 'em. One of 'em was a private, and that fellow beyond was a corporal, but the man beyond him was a major, and that man away over in the corner was a colonel."

"Indeed! And are they all good men?"

"Well," said the farmer, "the private is a first-class man, and the corporal's pretty good, too."

"But what about the major and the colonel?"

"The major's only so-so," replied the farmer, with some hesitation.

"But the colonel?"

"Well, sir, I ain't a-going to say a word against no man who has been a colonel in the American army, but I've made up my mind to one thing—I ain't a-going to hire any brigadier-generals."

WINDOWS BY THE THOUSAND.

It is doubtful whether Queen Victoria of Sparta will ever "go over" her new abode in its entirety. An ordinary young brides so love to do, for if she did four miles of corridors and passages every weekday it would occupy about a year. The Escorial contains 1,200 miles of these passages. It has also 11,000 windows, not including those of the church. It is a remarkable building, comprising at once a palace, a convent, a church and a mausoleum.

All love isn't blind; some of it is only near-sighted.

TO WALK AROUND THE WORLD.

Englishman Must Go Masked and Pushing a Perambulator.

In the face of a north-east wind a man started the other morning from Trafalgar Square, London, England, on a tour around the world. The adventurer undertook the task for a wager of $100,000, the details of which he gave in the course of an interview.

"This wager," he said, "was laid by a friend of mine, a well-known American millionaire, as the outcome of an argument that took place at a club in Pall Mall. He declared that no Englishman could walk around the world and push a perambulator. After hearing the conditions I at once made up my mind to accept the wager myself. Upon telling him of the decision I had come to he at once made arrangements with another well-known American gentleman to accompany me. He is only doing it for sport."

When asked how he was going to subsist he replied:—

"I am starting penniless and I shall sell photographs and pamphlets while on the journey. I am allowed to expend any sum not exceeding £1 (85) for photographs and pamphlets for sale at the start. That is how I shall subsist."

A very difficult task is before the walker. In order to win the wager he has to touch every county in England, to visit Scotland, Ireland and Wales and to call at twenty countries. He is to buy a postage stamp at every town passed through on his journey. Among the other conditions of this most remarkable wager are that he is to find a wife on the road, to forward an account of the miles walked and the towns visited and to obtain a signed document from the mayor or some other responsible person in each town. He is to be allowed to "go as you please."

"Good-bye," the wayfarer called out merrily as he disappeared; "See you in ten years."

WOODEN LEGGED ON.

Bullock's Limb Was Amputated—Artificial One Affixed.

There is to be seen at present on the farm of the Hope, on Berwick Corporation Estate, Scotland (tenanted by Mr. Richardson), a bullock feeding for the market, which has a wooden leg.

It appears that while the bullock, which belonged to Mr. H. Dowson, was being taken from Newcastle to Berwick, his leg was broken in the railway wagon. On arrival at Berwick the broken limb was set, but as it showed no signs of healing the veterinary surgeon amputated the leg and substituted a wooden one.

The leg was made by Mr. J. Cockburn, joiner, Berwick, and the leather by which it is substituted is fixed by Mr. T. Cockrane, Berwick. The experiment has proved successful, and the animal is now being fattened on the farm.

MARY'S BEES.

Mary had a swarm of bees. And, oh, they loved her so; For everywhere that Mary went The bees were sure to go.

Of course, dear sir, you wonder why? The answer now arrives: Without her they would freeze to death, For Mary had the hives.

A man may be as good as his word and still not be a saint.

National Cat Club of England should have been an event of importance. Some 430 cats, accompanied by adoring owners, competed for prizes.

The Countess of Stratford is president of the league, and Louis Wain, the cat portrait painter, is the chairman. There were six judges, and they had their hands full in keeping peace, not among the cats, but among the cats' owners who did not win prizes. The cats themselves were haughtily indifferent as to results.

They were divided into 104 classes. There were two main sections and these were subdivided into open, novice, kitten, team, brace, and breeders classes, according to sex and colors, white, black, blue, chinchilla, smoke, silver gray, brown tabby, red tabby, silver tabby, orange, cream, tortoiseshell, and any other color.

The short-haired varieties included Siamese, Abyssinian, Manx, Dutch, and British mousers. The long-haired were the Persians, Angoras, etc. The greatest prize ever known to have been paid for a cat was secured in London. It was $5,000.

Just as every dog has his day, so does every cat. This year the Siamese reigned supreme as being fashionable and most successful.

DANGER!!

"One of my weaknesses," said the bon vivant, "is Swiss cheese. I'm very fond of it."

"Oh," exclaimed the dyspeptic "that's the cheese with the holes in it; very indigestible."

"Are they? Well, I never eat the holes."

Kingston, Feb. 10.—Thomas G.
Baker, an Englishman, aged thirty-five years, committed suicide this morning at his home on Toronto street.
His children found him hanging in the kitchen with a rope around his neck.
He had been dead several hours. Despondency over hardships was the cause of his rash act. Baker came from England a year ago. This morning he was to have gone to work on the street railway line. He leaves a wife and five children.

Tells How To Mix It

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the readers of a large
New York daily paper the following valuable, yet simple and harmless prescription, which any one can easily prepare at home. Fluid Extract
Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound
Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime. He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take. This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach.
While there are many so called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time. Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists here will mix the prescription for our readers if asked to.

corpse until Saturday, when with difficulty the body was conveyed to the vault. The memorial service was held in the church here on the following Sabbath. Mrs. Bell was always a consistent member of the Methodist church and always attended the ser-

MARLBANK.

The roads are in a bad state owing to the depth of snow falling of late. The trains have not been able to make their regular trips for a few days, but the road men by a desperate effort have opened the road up again and the trains are running their regular trips, which makes it appear more pleasant.

There were no services in either Church on Sunday, Feb. 2nd, owing to the bad condition of the roads.

It is said that the Thermometer registered 40 below for some time, which made several in our town complain of cold houses.

At an early hour on Wednesday morning our quiet little town was thrown into quite a considerable excitement, when quite a shock was felt every one supposing it to be that of an earthquake when it was learned early in the day that the dynamite works at Tweed had been blown up notwithstanding there was a loss of property, yet fortunately there were no lives lost.

We are glad to say that the diphtheria and Scarlet fever, which was said to be under progress here, is rapidly decreasing under the able treatment of Dr. Burrows.

The Chessa Friends' Society, of Marlbank, held a meeting on Friday evening, when nine new ones were made members of this Society, which was followed on Saturday evening by an oyster supper. Notwithstanding the condition of the roads and the cold weather, the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. The chair, which was ably filled by William Scantlin, presented a long list of programme which reached well nigh till morning. After every one had well partaken of oysters and other choice things. They were further entertained by the string band of Marlbank.

The Story of a Stuffed Cat in the Smithsonian Institution.

In the Smithsonian Institution at Washington is a case containing a stuffed cat. A card attached to the case, setting forth the reasons why this particular feline is known to fame, gives official sanction to a tale that is in every respect as remarkable as any emanating from the nature fakirs. The story of the cat is as follows:

Many years ago, while the Washington monument was still in an unfinished condition, an adventurous and patriotic cat ascended the interior of the shaft by means of the ropes and scaffolding. When the workmen arrived at the upper landing the next morning and began to prepare for the day's work the cat took fright and, springing to the outer edge, took the leap of over 500 feet to the hard earth below.

The chair, which was ably filled by William Scantlin, presented a long list of programme which reached well nigh till morning. After every one had well partaken of oysters and other choice things. They were further entertained by the string band of Marlbank, followed by dialogues, solos, recitations, singing. There was an able address from the Chair, the event being closed by singing God save the King. Mr. William Scantlin deserved great praise for the active part he has taken in the advancement of the Cause—the right man in the right place.

A very sad and painful accident occurred on Monday morning at the Cement Works, Marlbank, when Peter Windover an employee, was engaged repairing a belt. His hand caught between the belt and the pulley and his arm broken and badly mangled, and had to be amputated about three inches above the elbow. The accident occurred on the top part of the coal shed. He assisted in helping to get his arm out of the machinery, after which he walked along the scaffold and came down the ladder to the office without the aid of any one. Mr. Windover is one of the oldest hands at the works and has always been known to be a sober and careful hand. He has the sympathy of the whole community in his trouble.

In the descent, which was watched closely by the workmen, the cat spread herself out like a flying squirrel, fell slowly and alighted, as cats always do, on all fours. After turning over on the soil a few times as if dazed she prepared to leave the grounds. She had proceeded almost beyond the shadow of the monument when a stray terrier pounced upon and killed her.

One of the workmen rescued the remains of the cat and turned them over to the Smithsonian Institution, which caused the skin to be mounted and placed under the glass case.—Youth's Companion.

MONTREAL BOY AND GIRL HEALED BY Zam-Buk

Keep Zam-Buk Handy!
Accidents will happen to the best regulated families, and the necessity of keeping handy a box of Zam-Buk—the valuable "first-aid" cannot be too strongly insisted upon.

Mr. E. Webster, 519 Seigneurs Street, Montreal, says: "One day as I was lifting a pan of water off the stove, my son Eddie ran toward me and knocked the pan upwards. The water ran over his neck and scalded him very badly. It is a very awkward place on which to keep a plaster and several things which we tried failed to give him relief. We then applied Zam-Buk (which we had used some time before for a bad gathering on my little daughter's head) and this acted like a charm. It drew away the pain and healed the scald. We have proved Zam-Buk an invaluable remedy."
